TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertiser has a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TUDOR STREET,

TO THE TRADE.

Dear Sir,

The great success which has attended the "Daily Express" offer of Chambers's Encyclopaedia will, unfortunately, render the withdrawal of this offer imperative within a short space of time. It is computed that the edition arranged for with the publishers on the instalment plan will be exhausted in two or three weeks.

May we suggest that you should make a final canvas of your customers, pointing out the urgency of an early application? There are always many hesitant purchasers, and as these invariably come in with a rush at the end, you would doubtless find it very profitable to secure their orders before it is too late. We are having a special leaflet prepared, indicating that the end is in sight, and shall be glad to forward a number of these to you, on hearing from you how many you could distribute, and we will be glad to help you in any other way in our power.

Many booksellers find it pays well to cut the current advertisement out of the daily issue of the "Express," and paste it in a prominent position in their windows. Each day until the offer is withdrawn, which is now only a matter of days, there will be a striking advertisement in the "Express," and we take the liberty of calling your attention to this idea.

Yours faithfully,

THE GENERAL MANAGER.

IN CLOTH AND PAPER COVERS.

The Visits of Elizabeth. By ELINOR GLYN.

STANDARD.—'The jaded reader in search of a novelty had better try "The Visits of Elizabeth." It is as fresh, amusing, and original a piece of work as he is likely to come across for a long time. A highly diverting book.'

The Monk Wins. By E. H. COOPER.

LITERATURE.—'The best book of its kind since the days of Hawley Smart.'

Children, Racehorses, and Ghosts. By E. H. COOPER.

Resolved to be Rich. By E. H. COOPER.

STANDARD.—'A highly entertaining story. The character-drawing is admirable. The women are all good, Lady Eastney especially so. We find it excellent reading.'

The Crimson Weed. By CHRISTOPHER ST. JOHN.

STANDARD.—'It is a remarkable bit of work and ranks well above average fiction.'

The Altar of Life: an Anglo-Indian Tale. By MAY BATEMAN.

In the Cage. By HENRY JAMES.

STANDARD.—'A singularly successful instance of Mr. James's subtlety. The whole thing is delicate, vivid, and pieced together with extraordinary skill and insight. The whole story is in Mr. James's best and most ingenious vein.'

A Son of the Sea. By J. A. BARRY.

THE GOSPEL OF WEALTH,

By ANDREW CARNEGIE.

As a rule the man who amasses a large fortune is voiceless. In Mr. Andrew Carnegie's case it is different. For many years he has expressed himself freely on the political and social questions of the day. His forcible statement of 'The Gospel of Wealth' has attracted wide attention—largely for the reason that he not only insists upon liberal giving, but exemplifies his teachings by setting apart millions yearly for the founding and endowment in Great Britain and America of free libraries, art galleries, &c.

THE LIBRARY OF NATURAL HISTORY ROMANCE.

Volume I.

THE ROMANCE of WILD FLOWERS:

A Companion to the British Flora. By EDWARD STEP, F.L.S. With upwards of 200 Illustrations.

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—'No one is better qualified to write a popular book on the British flora than Mr. Edward Step. He is the guide, counsellor, and friend of every field club, and his knowledge, gained as it is from Nature herself rather than from the library or the classroom, is placed before the unscientific reader in just such a form as he or she can easily comprehend. Print, illustrations, and text are alike excellent, and this library should appeal to every lover of the country.'

NEW EDITION.

Demy 8vo. cloth gilt, 496 pp. 7s. 6d. With an Explanatory Table.

SOULE'S DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH

SYNONYMS AND SYNONYMOUS OR PARALLEL EXPRESSIONS.

Designed as a Practical Guide to Aptness and Variety of Phraseology. Revised and Enlarged by GEORGE H. HOWISON, LL.D.

The author's aim has been to present at a single glance the words or modes of speech which denote the same object or express the same idea with only slight shades of difference.

NEW WORK ON MEMORY.

By EUSTACE H. MILES, M.A. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

HOW TO REMEMBER:

Without Memory Systems or With Them.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.—'My plan has been to find undoubted examples of things which all or most of us remember very easily or surely; to examine why we remember them; and then to see what methods and means of remembering may be suggested by these examples. . . . I have suggested for consideration just a few ideas which may help readers to find out for themselves what are the truest and best lines of memory-culture for them. It remains for them to develop and to improve upon these ideas, and to tell me where and why I am wrong.'

THE ART OF THINKING.

By T. SHARPER KNOWLSON. Small crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top price 2s. 6d.

'A sensible and well-arranged little book which should be in the hands of every young man and particularly, we may add, of every journalist.'—LITERATURE.

Royal 4to. oblong, varnished picture boards, cloth back, price 6s.

THE BUNKUM BOOK: a Topsy Turvey Tale

32 Full-Page Pictures in Colours by MAUD TRELAUNY. With Descriptive Verses by AUBREY HOPWOOD.

'The verses are clever jingles that will linger in the memory of a little reader, and provoke sudden smiles long after the book is closed.'

Is Topsy Turvey Land,

Where trees have roots that grow in air,

And branches in the sand.

The skies are green instead of blue,

And happy people frown,

For every single thing they do

Is always upside down.

The COURT JOURNAL says: 'It deserves to rank with the famous "Golliwogg" books. That the verse is clever the name of its author guarantees, for Mr. Hopwood writes some of the best lyrics of the day. It is certainly one of the successes of the year.' A volume to make the little ones scream with laughter! —LLOYD'S NEWS.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST DICTIONARY

The Concise English Dictionary

By CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D., Editor of the 'Imperial Dictionary.'

New Edition, containing over 100,000 Entries.Fcap. 4to. 864 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d.; also in half-persian, 5s. 6d.; half-morocco, 7s. 6d.

ANNANDALE'S CONCISE DICTIONARY has, since its first publication, held a pre-eminent place among One-Volume English Dictionaries. It is now issued, in an extended form, at so low a price as to bring it within the reach of everybody.

The CONCISE DICTIONARY contains more printed matter than any Dictionary of similar price.

A computation shows that the matter in this Dictionary comprises 1,755,000 words, while that in a rival Dictionary is only 1,000,000 words.

The General Vocabulary is very ample. All important modern terms pertaining to Science, Technology, and the Arts are clearly and accurately explained.

The Definitions and Explanations are exceptionally full and detailed, giving so much information that this Dictionary may justly claim the character of a Concise Cyclopædia.

The Etymology shows results obtained by the most recent investigators, and the correct pronunciation of the words is given on an exceedingly simple system.

The Appendices comprise full Pronouncing Lists of—Greek, Latin, Scriptural, and other Ancient Names, Modern Geographical Names.
Modern Biographical Names.

ALSO

Key to noted names in Fiction, Mythology, &c.

Alphabetical List of prominent English Writers, with Dates of Birth and Death.

Words, Phrases, and Noteworthy Sayings, from the Latin, Greek, and Modern Languages, met with in Current English.

Abbreviations and Contractions used in Writing and Printing.

Forms of Address in Ceremonious Communications with Persons of Title and Official Position.

Principal Moneys of the World, and their Equivalents in English Currency.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

'We can heartily recommend this neat and handy volume to all who want a copious and trustworthy English Dictionary of reasonable dimensions.'

ATHENÆUM.

'Stands towards other dictionaries of the smaller character in the relation of the "Imperial" to rival lexicons—in other words, it holds the "premier" place.'—SPECTATOR.

'The Concise Dictionary stands first—and by a long interval—among all the one-volume English Dictionaries.'—ACADEMY.

'In clearness of type, in size, shape, and arrangement, the volume leaves nothing to be desired. Till Dr. Murray's great work is completed, it is not likely to be superseded.'—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

London: BLACKIE & SON, Limited, OLD BAILEY.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

SOCIAL LIFE IN THE BRITISH ARMY. By A BRITISH OFFICER. With Sixteen Full-page Illustrations on Art Paper by R. CATON WOODVILLE.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—Brightly written by the Military expert of the Westminster Gazette, and neatly illustrated by Mr. Caton Woodville; this is a most interesting and instructive volume. It is just what was wanted now that the question of the cost of life in the Army and the impossibility for an officer of living upon his pay has been brought into such prominence. The question is emphatically one of those which must not be allowed to slip away again should a long peace follow on the present war, as questions have a way of doing. "A British Officer" makes some very shrewd points in the matter. He performs a useful service in clearing the ground of vulgar exaggerations, the French and Russian myths of the British Officer's wild luxuriousness, the agitator's "gilded popinjay" superficialities, the duties and recreations of the officer, sketches life at Sandhurst and the Staff College, and devotes a chapter to Tommy and to Mrs. Tommy in the married quarters.

AUSTRALIA AT THE FRONT. A Colonial View of the Boer War. By FRANK WILKINSON (Special Correspondent Sydney Daily Telegraph). With Map and Twenty Illustrations on Art Paper by NORMAN H. HARDY, from Sketches on the Spot and Photos by the Author.

DAILY MAIL.—"It may safely be said that no war correspondent's work is more deserving of attention than Mr. Frank Wilkinson's. He gives facts in a bright, humorous, unaffected way, and some of these facts require careful study by the nation. This is certainly a book to be read and studied. It is convincing in its moderation and truthfulness, excellently illustrated, and furnished with a good map."

DAILY NEWS.—"We think we have never read a war correspondent's story on which scrupulous honesty was more clearly written. It is a book which deserves to be read by any student of the war, and will certainly be welcomed by all Australians who shared in the campaign."

Vathek

History of the Caliph Vathek. By WILLIAM BECKFORD, Esq. Printed verbatim from the First Edition. With the Original Prefaces and Notes by HENLEY. The Preface contains a short biographical sketch of the life of the late William Beckford.

The last of a long line of stories, formerly so popular that Pope says of Phillips that he 'Turned a Persian tale for half-a-crown.'

Abdallah ;

or, the Four-leaved Shamrock. By EDOUARD RENÉ LEFEBVRE-LABOULAYE, Membre de l'Institut de France. Translated by MARY L. BOOTH.

'He who gives to the world one pure and good story the aim of which is to sow seeds of virtue, a love of right, and that poetic trust in the workings of a wise and good God—he who successfully does all this is a very great man whose name is to be remembered.'—Extract from INTRODUCTORY ESSAY.

Chevalier Bayard

The Life of Chevalier Bayard. Translated from the French of the Loyal Servant, M. de Berville. By EDITH WALFORD.

'The present series . . . which contains a translation of the "Knight without Fear and without Reproach," will really, we think, fill a void in the shelves of all except the most complete English libraries. These little square-shaped volumes contain in a very manageable and pretty form a great many things not very easy of access elsewhere, and some things for the first time brought together.

'Praise of him must walk the earth
For ever, and to noble deeds give birth.
This is the happy warrior: this is he
That every man in arms would wish to be.'

WORDSWORTH.

Reflections or Sentences and Moral Maxims

By FRANÇOIS DUC DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Prince de Marsillac. Translated from the Editions of 1678 and 1827. With Introduction, Notes, and some Account of the Author and his Times.

Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia

By SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D. With an Introduction by the Rev. WILLIAM WEST, B.A.

'For a model of grave and majestic language "Rasselas" will claim perhaps the first place in English Composition: nor do I recollect any work of the kind that contains so many profound reflections, and, with occasional reserve as to their generality, so many true ones.'—LEIGH HUNT.

Saint Louis, King of France

By the Sire DE JOINVILLE. Translated by JAMES HUTTON.

'A king, a hero, and a man.'—GIBBON.

'St. Louis and his companions as described by Joinville, not only in their glistening armour but in their everyday attire, are brought nearer to us, become intelligible to us, and teach us lessons of humanity which we can learn from men only, and not from saints and heroes. Here lies the real value of real history—it widens our minds and our hearts, and gives us that true knowledge of the world and of human nature in all its phases which but few can gain in the short span of their own life, and in the narrow sphere of their friends and enemies.'—TIMES.

Religio Medici

Hydriotaphia, and The Letter to a Friend. By Sir THOMAS BROWNE, Knt. With an Introduction and Notes by J. W. WILLIS BUND, M.A., LL.B., Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-law.

Ballad Stories of the Affections

By ROBERT BUCHANAN. Translated from the Scandinavian.

In this work Mr. Buchanan has used as far as possible the English dialect, drawing liberally upon Scotch words that are familiar to all readers of our own ballads.

The Round Table

By WILLIAM HAZLITT.

'I should belie my own conscience, if I said less than that I think W. H. to be, in his natural and healthy state, one of the wisest and finest spirits. . . . I shall go to my grave without finding or expecting to find such another companion.'—CHARLES LAMB.

The Words of Wellington

Collected from his Despatches, Letters, and Speeches, with Anecdotes, &c. By EDITH WALFORD.

'For this is England's greatest son,
He that gain'd a hundred fights
Nor ever lost an English gun.'

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON.

Letters, Sentences and Maxims

By Lord CHESTERFIELD. With a Critical Essay by C. A. SAINTE-BEUVE, de l'Académie Française.

'Viewed as compositions they appear almost unrivalled for a serious epistolary style; clear, elegant, and terse, never straining at effect, and yet never hurried into carelessness.'—LORD MAHON.

APPROVED SCHOOL BOOKS BY DR. CORNWELL, F.R.G.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 88th Edition, 3s. 6d.; or with Thirty Maps, 5s. 6d.

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system.'—ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2s. 6d., or 4s. coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1s.; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1s. 4d. Questions, 6d.

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1s.

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL GRAMMAR. 65th Edition, 2s. red leather; or 1s. 9d. cloth

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 88th Edition, 1s. cloth; 9d. sewed. 'This simple introduction is as good a book as can be used.' SPECTATOR.

The Book is enlarged by a Section on Word-Building, with Exercises for Young Children.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1s. 6d. KEY, 3s.

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found valuable to the intelligent instructor.'—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the same time. 4th Edition, 1s.

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4s. 6d.

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.' LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY to SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4s. 6d.

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1s. 6d. KEY, 4s. 6d.

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.' ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

ARITHMETIC FOR BEGINNERS. Combines simplicity and fulness in teaching the First Four Rules and Elementary Fractions. 9th Edition. 1s.

THE MEDITERRANEAN RACE

A Study of the Origin of European Peoples

By Professor SERGI.

In this book, which is almost entirely new, and has been specially prepared by the author for the 'Contemporary Science Series,' Professor Sergi has presented the first full statement of the facts and views that—since he first brought them forward five years ago—have done so much to revolutionise the Aryan question. The evidence there contained tends to show that the race inhabiting Southern Europe and Northern Africa formerly occupied, and to some extent still occupies, the greater part of Central and Northern Europe, including the British Isles, and has played the chief part in European civilisation.

New Edition of Ibsen's Prose Dramas

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

In this edition each play forms a volume by itself. The typographical features of the original Norwegian editions are, so far as possible, reproduced. The names of the characters are placed above their speeches instead of in the same line, thus giving the page a lighter and more attractive appearance. Each volume contains a frontispiece, representing, as a rule, one of the leading characters as embodied by a well-known actor or actress.

J. M. DENT & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

THE WORKING CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

By the Rt. Hon. LEONARD H. COURTNEY. Square demy 8vo. cloth gilt. Photogravure Frontispiece. 7s. 6d. net.

'A work something between a book to be read and a book of reference, full of accurate information, full of good sense, which will speedily find its way into the libraries of most men who occupy themselves much with public affairs. . . . The book is written with an absence of party spirit which would be commendable in anyone.'—SPECTATOR.

ROMANTIC ESSEX: Pedestrian Impressions.

By REGINALD A. BECKETT. Illustrated with 3 Painter-Etchings by F. C. TILNEY. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

'All the pleasanter for the flavour of leisureliness which hangs about it. Mr. Beckett is a most companionable guide, and writes of Colchester, and oysters, and old British roads, and Essex drinking fashions, and timber churches, and traditions of battlefields—in fact, all the lore of Essex—with graceful readiness and ease.'—PILGRIM.

BALLADS OF THE WAR.

By Canon RAWNSLEY. Second, Illustrated and Enlarged Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

'It is a veritable chronicle of golden deeds which Canon Rawnsley recounts in these stirring and often pathetic ballads. . . . A few historical and personal notes, and many portraits, heighten the appeal of the volume.'—LEEDS MERCURY.

OSWALD VON WOLKENSTEIN.

The last Minnesinger of Tirol. By Signora LINDA VILLARI. With many Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. net.

'The story of Oswald reads like a little Odyssey, so full is it of incident, adventure, and travel. . . . An interesting and vivid picture of the feudal life of Germany at the end of the fourteenth century.'—REVIEW OF THE WEEK.

THE ALFRED MILLENARY, 1901.

ALFRED THE WEST SAXON.

By DUGALD MACFADYEN, M.A. With Portraits, Facsimiles, &c. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. net.

'A pleasant book, which comes out at an appropriate moment. . . . Mr. Macfadyen is no dryasdust antiquarian, but he has an affection for pretty legends whether they have been exploded or not.'—TIMES.

NOW COMPLETED.

A PICTURESQUE HISTORY OF YORKSHIRE.

By J. S. FLETCHER. With 600 Illustrations. In 3 vols., 7s. 6d. net per vol.; or large paper edition 17s. 6d. net per vol.; also in 18 parts 1s. net per part.

'A storehouse of local tradition, and the tales of old are freshly and pleasantly told. But it is as much a book for the nature-lover as for the antiquarian. . . . The style is clear and direct and the mass of information which the author has collected is arranged, on the whole, with a due sense of proportion.'—SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

LANCASHIRE HUMOUR.

By THOMAS NEWBIGGING. Illustrated by J. A. SYMINGTON. Long fcp. 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. net.

'A collection of comic stories indigenous to Lancashire, which one may fairly claim could not be excelled for quantity and quality by any county in England.'

NORTHERN COUNTIES MAGAZINE.

THE TEMPLE CLASSICS

Edited by ISRAEL GOLLANCZ.

CRICKET AND GOLF.

By the Hon. ROBERT LYTTELTON. With 9 Illustrations from old Prints of Players and Grounds reproduced in Facsimile Colours and Photogravure. Cloth extra, 7s. 6d. net.

'Our author is the master of an easy, virile style; and he has a profound understanding of all the niceties of his two subjects which is only equal to his evident love of them. . . . We have found a difficulty in giving any true indication of the gist of this admirable book, because it covers such a variety of matters all closely inter-related; but if we have made it plain to the lover of cricket and cricket lore that this is a book to be bought, we have achieved our end.'

DAILY CHRONICLE.

BIRD-WATCHING.

By EDMUND SELOUS. Illustrated with numerous Bird Studies by J. SMIT, reproduced in Photogravure and in the text. [Shortly.]

A Vagabond in Asia. By EDMUND CANDLER. With numerous Illustrations from original photographs. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 6s.
'Brightly written and full of observation that throws vivid and playful sidelights here and there, and provides entertainment that does not always appertain to works of travel.'

MORNING POST.

Bret Harte: a Treatise and a Tribute. By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON. With a Portrait and Foreword by BRET HARTE. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

Swinburne: a Study. By THEODORE WRATISLAW. With a

Northern Lights and Shadows. Tales of Eskimo Life. By R. G. TABER. With a Prefatory Letter in Facsimile from the Marquis of Lorne.
Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

'We take pleasure in commending the book because of its freshness and genuine excellence.
Mr. Taber has undoubtedly struck what is a virgin soil so far as fiction is concerned. The local colour of the story is novel—so novel, in fact, as to give quite an unusual interest and value to the book.'—DAILY CHRONICLE.

Woman: a Study and Defence. Adapted from the French of ALFRED FOUILLEE by the Rev. T. A. SEED. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

Captain Mayne Reid: his Life and Adventures. By his WIDOW and CHAS. COE, U.S.A. With numerous Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

'The career of this popular writer was adventurous and thrilling, and Mrs. Mayne Reid tells in the most entertaining manner the literary history of her husband and the eventful incidents of his career. Altogether it is a fascinating biography of an interesting person.'—WORLD.

The Messias of Shakspeare. By CLELIA (CHAS.
DOWNING). Demy 8vo. art cloth, gilt, 5s.

W. L. COURTNEY, in 'DAILY TELEGRAPH,' says:—'It is a wonderful book that Mr. Downing has written, and no brief analysis could do it adequate justice.'

A Book of the Poster. Illustrated. 7s. 6d. By W. S.
ROGERS.

'A complete and valuable work upon an important and interesting subject.'—SKETCH.

'A large and handsome book. Well written and beautifully illustrated.'

Illustrated. The best guide to health and strength ever published. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

A Detached Pirate. By HELEN MILECETE, Author of 'A Girl of the North.' 3s. 6d.

'A clever and audacious book. The story is told in letters, and very clever letters they are.
Miss Vandeleur is not nerve, and I prefer her wholesome audacity to the wild wailing of 'The Love Letters of an Englishwoman.'—LADIES' PICTORIAL.

Mad? By J. PYM LOUGHNAN. 2s. 6d.

The Magnetism of Sin. By 'ESCUAPIUS.' 3s. 6d.

COLONIAL LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUMES JUST READY.

The Modern Argonauts. By ELIZA ORZESZKO. Translated from the Polish by COUNT C. S. DE SOISSONS.

Red Fate. By EDMUND FORBES.

Green Passion. By ANTHONY P. VERTE.

'A remarkably clever book. . . . There is no disputing the ability with which the writer handles her subject. I say her subject, because the minuteness of the touches, and the odd, forcible style in which this book is written, point to it being the work of a female hand. The book is an eminently readable one, and it is never dull for a minute.'—QUEEN.

A Son of Africa. By ANNA COMTESSE DE BREMONT, Author of 'Daughters of Pleasure,' 'The Gentleman Digger,' &c.

Such is the Law. By MARIE M. SADLER, Author of 'An Uncanny Girl' &c.

'An undoubtedly clever novel, told in vigorous language.'—SUN.

'From the Book Beautiful,' &c.

A Cry in the Night. By ARNOLD GOLSWORTHY ('Jingle' of Pick-me-up).

A Man Adrift. By BART KENNEDY, Author of 'The Wandering Romanoff' &c.

Mora: One Woman's History. By T. W. SPEIGHT.

The Tragedy of a Pedigree. By HUGO AMES.

'Such easy epigrammatic talk as is to be found in this book is not often met with. It is witty and delightful, and the characters seem to be drawn from life with a master-pen.'—SKETCH.

The After-Taste. By COMPTON REIDE, Author of 'Hard Lines,' 'Under which King,' &c.

Dr. PARKER says:—'From beginning to end the action of the story is most vivid and most natural. It must certainly win itself many readers.'

Committed to his Charge. A Canadian Romance by the Misses R. and M. LIZARS.

'This book is decidedly interesting. The authors have a very pleasant gift of gaiety and an agreeable way of expressing themselves.'—ATHENÆUM.

The Prettiness of Fools. By EDGAR HEWITT.

'A powerful and interesting book, with the interest kept up till the end. . . . Altogether a very amusing and clever book.'—GENTLEWOMAN.

The Lady of the Leopard. By Mrs. VERE CAMPBELL.

'A remarkable book. . . . We are plunged into a delicious and tantalising romance; incident follows incident like a panorama of exciting pictures. Fertility of imagination is everywhere apparent, and the dénouement is artfully concealed till it bursts upon the reader with a suddenness that fairly takes away his breath.'—PUBLIC OPINION.

PLANT AND FLORAL STUDIES. FOR DESIGNERS, ART STUDENTS, AND CRAFTSMEN.

By W. G. PAULSON TOWNSEND

Containing ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS of Garden Flowers, Wild Flowers, Fruit, Vegetable, and Seaweed.

MANY, if not all, Designers and Craftsmen have felt the want of an inexpensive collection of careful and accurate Studies from Nature of Plant and Floral Growth. Plants have been specially selected for their decorative qualities, or rather those Plants which contain and happily suggest qualities, or peculiar features adaptable to the Designer's needs.

This book of 'Plant and Floral Studies' comprises a careful selection of Working Drawings from Nature in firm line, consequently it is clear and practical, the growth and structure of the Plants being specially marked.

IMPERIAL COPYRIGHT.

Lord Thring has a well-written and comprehensive article on this subject in the May issue of the Empire Review. It is satisfactory to learn from it that Lord Monkswell's Bill for consolidating the law relating to literary copyright has been adopted by the Cabinet, and that it is expected that the Bill will be introduced this session into the House of Commons as a Government measure. Assuredly it is a Bill that has gone through a large measure of adversity. At one time, under the Copyright Association, it had the ambition to combine literary copyright with art and music. Then it went into partnership with Lord Monkswell, and after a good hammering out by a Select Committee of the House of Lords it was freed from incompatible elements, and now it has at last come forth like refined gold, purified from all outside dross, presumably perfect in shape and form and capable of covering and protecting all the rights pertaining to literary property only, leaving the fine arts, sculpture, painting, &c., to protect themselves as best they may by separate legislation.

There was a time when we who are old used to look upon Talfourd's Act of 1842 as a model of perfection, and indeed it has worked well for sixty years. Since it was first inaugurated many changes have taken place in the expansion of our Empire, which have rendered a revision and extension of its clauses absolutely necessary, and particularly as to the British Colonies and Dependencies; as well as international arrangements which, through the Berne Convention, have rendered it easy to carry an author's copyright practically around the civilised world. By Talfourd's Act an author could secure copyright in his own country and throughout the British Empire, but his claim to copyright in foreign countries was hampered with difficulties, even with those countries where an international law existed. An author's foreign copyright was limited to five years from the date of first issue, and then only on the condition that the translation should be printed and published within three months of first publication of the original. Now, in all countries of the Berne Union, copyright is universal without form or ceremony—other than those of the country of origin.

Lord Thring describes the scope of international copyright very clearly, but in illustrating its practical operation he is not so clear—that is to say, he exemplifies what is only of the remotest probability as though it were a settled matter of everyday occurrence. Thus he says:—

'A book is subject to national copyright in its country of origin, and also to international copyright in the several countries admitting that right. The result is that an author, instead of assigning the whole copyright to a single publisher, parcels it out, as it were, amongst a variety of publishers, granting to each a licence. . . . For example: Johnson, an English author, grants a licence to Bull, an English publisher, conditioned that he is to publish and sell only in England. He grants a licence in Germany in the same book to a German publisher, restricting the same to Germany, and so on with respect to other countries.'

This looks very pretty in theory, but practically it must be remembered that it takes two to make a bargain, and what publisher in his senses would incur the cost of paying an author, setting type, providing paper and print and binding, if his market is to be confined to England? If his enterprise is to be duly rewarded he must have the range of the whole world. If an author makes an arrangement for Germany—for, say, Tauchnitz editions—these practically are not confined to Germany, they range without let or hindrance over the whole Continent of Europe, the only restriction being that they must not (though they do) find their way into England or into British territories. On the other hand, Tauchnitz does not forbid the circulation of the original English edition in Germany.

It is true that an author can, by setting his type and printing his book in America, secure copyright for himself there, and so shut out his English edition therefrom. Otherwise, so far as international arrangements are concerned, Lord Thring's interpretation of the law is rather theoretical than practical.

As a matter of fact, international copyright, so far as the Continent of Europe is concerned, has rather to do with Translations than Reprints—as regards the latter the chief value of the Act will consist in its strengthening the means of preventing the importation of unauthorised reprints into this or any other country where the work originated.

As regards the Colonies, the question, as Lord Thring says, 'presents considerable difficulties.' The Act of 1842 did not work well in Canada on account of its proximity to its great freebooting neighbour, which seized English copyrights, right and left, and reprinted them unmercifully, while Canada, however much it may have desired to do the same, had to stand by demurely, unable to touch these cheap reprints. At length, however, she could withstand the temptation no longer, and in 1847, as Lord Thring says:—

'At their solicitation the Colonial Act of 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 95) was passed by the Imperial Government. This Act provided that if any Colonial legislature passed an Act . . . sufficient to secure the British author reasonable protection for his work, an Order in Council might declare that, so long as such Act should be in force, the provisions which prohibit the importation into the colony should be suspended. The Act was intended specially for Canada, but no fewer than nineteen colonies availed themselves of its provisions and obtained orders enabling them to import printed (? pirated) editions. It still remains in force.'

The reasonable protection which Lord Thring does not mention was that the importers should pay a Customs Duty of 12½ per cent., the proceeds to be paid over to the authors interested.

Lord Thring says 'this Act still remains in force,' but further on he says that a subsequent Act of 1871 practically had the effect of repealing this Act. This Foreign Reprints Act, as it was called, was always quite inoperative—the results for authors derived from Canada being only nominal, whilst probably very few authors ever heard of anything whatever resulting to them from the other 'nineteen colonies.' One wonders what colonies these comprise!

Surely Lord Thring is not quite right in stating that, by the Act of 1842, 'a colonial author was entitled under it to no protection whatever.' That may be true if he published in his own colony first, but he had an easy remedy, seeing that, as a matter of fact, he was entitled by that Act to copyright throughout the whole of the British Dominions. Not only he, but every author of every nationality was able to get British copyright simply by publishing first in Great Britain, and it is at least doubtful whether he had not that right by publishing first in his own colony. Thus it was that American authors used to run over to Canada and reside there for a week or two while their books were being published in London; but even that residence was not necessary—for first publication alone was latterly recognised as all that was really necessary.

In 1875 the Dominion passed an Act (which received the Imperial Assent) which granted to any person domiciled in Canada (or in any other British Dominion) power to obtain copyright in Canada, by printing and publishing or reprinting and republishing his work there. This Act seems to have been conceived in a spirit wholly beneficial to English authors, but Lord Thring says: 'A British author is thus excluded from obtaining Canadian copyright.' On the contrary, he keeps his copyright, and by reprinting there he excludes American reprints. Moreover, his English editions are allowed to be imported there.

What the Canadian Act of 1900 apparently does is to confirm the previous Act, except that it forbids the importation of English editions, which may or may not be an advantage to the author, for what he gains on the one hand he loses on the other. As a matter of course the value of his home copyright is diminished if its free circulation in Canada is stopped. If Canada insists on this exclusion she will get it, and the author must submit to, possibly, a greater loss at home.

Lord Thring says that Canada is satisfied with the protection it gets from Lord Monkswell's Bill, but that the other self-governing colonies must give their consent before it is brought into Parliament, but he thinks it very unlikely that any colony will be so ill advised as to refuse its assent to the Bill.

We have not seen Lord Monkswell's Bill as it now stands, but if Lord Thring interprets it correctly, one of its possible results is to confine the efforts of English publishers to this little island of England, whilst it gives to the colonies the right not only to exclude the original English edition, but it reserves to them the right (which it expressly denies to the Mother Country) of IMPORTING FOREIGN (that is pirated) editions.

All this may be regarded as far-sighted legislation, and provides good law for the colonies of fifty years hence (if any such exist then), but luckily for English publishers it seems for the most part to be beyond the region of practical politics of to-day. As, however, these clever arrangements with different countries must necessarily depend on the ability of an author to carry them out in every case, there does not seem to be very much to be afraid of, because until they are carried out of course no restraint rests on the original publisher.

OUR EXPORT NUMBER.

This is the fourteenth year of issue—the primary object was to give this special number a free circulation throughout the British possessions and on the Continent of Europe. With this end in view 2,000 copies are printed over and above our usual large circulation, and these are specially addressed and posted to all the most likely regions abroad for bringing the books of the various publishers under the notice of booksellers and book-buyers. It is gratifying to find, as will be seen by our advertising columns, that our efforts in this direction are appreciated.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In consequence of repeated public reports that Mrs. W. K. Clifford is the author of 'An Englishwoman's Love Letters,' Mr. Murray has requested us to state that, although he has no certain knowledge of the origin of the Letters, he is convinced by Mrs. Clifford's assurances that she did not write them, or have any part whatsoever in the writing of them.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers are publishing next week 'The Love Letters of Victor Hugo to his Fiancée, 1820-1822,' translated by Elizabeth W. Latimer, with comment by Paul Meurice, and illustrated with portraits. Written with all the author's well-known eloquence and power, they are thought to be the most beautiful and emotional prose writings that have been published for many years.

'Tennyson' will be the subject of the next volume of Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Cyclopædic Primers.' This introduction has been written by Mr. Moreton Luce with the object of 'not only setting forth the poet's life and work, but also to enable its readers to appreciate more fully the great poetic art of which Tennyson was a master.' A short biography opens the volume, and in the remaining chapters the most important poems are dealt with at length. In an Appendix some account of a hitherto unpublished poem is given.

Lovers of Ibsen's prose dramas could scarcely purchase a more tasteful or convenient edition than that published by Mr. Walter Scott, under the editorship of that thorough disciple of Ibsen, Mr. William Archer. In this edition each play forms a volume in itself. The typographical features of the original Norwegian editions are as far as possible reproduced. Each volume contains a frontispiece, representing as a rule one of the leading characters, as embodied by a well-known actor or actress. The next volume in the series will be 'An Enemy of the People.'

The advantage of a comfortable home appeals to the interest of most people, and readers will therefore heartily welcome a volume of lectures and illustrations on 'The Art of Building a Home,' which Messrs. Longmans & Co. are shortly to publish. The authors, Mr. Barry Parker and Mr. Raymond Unwin, consider the subject from many points of view. They deal with the error of clinging to worn-out convention and the educative value of artistic surroundings; they point out how the necessary articles of home life may be beautified and the purchase of new needless ornaments in this way obviated; and they insist on the importance of designing a house with a primary view to the comfort and convenience of those who shall occupy it, and of making it as far as possible a truthful expression of the life that is to be lived in it.

Our colonies occupy no slight amount of public attention just now, and Mr. G. Firth Scott's important work on 'Britain's Austral Empire,' which Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are pushing forward for early publication, is certain to arouse wide interest. The author gives a brief outline of the Federation movement and a description of the various personalities who have been instrumental in its development. The illustrations form a prominent feature of the book, there being portraits of all the statesmen, Imperial and colonial, who have been associated with the movement, besides drawings typical of different phases of colonial life. Mr. Percy F. S. Spence, a native of Sydney, whose work has often attracted attention at the Royal Academy and elsewhere, is the artist responsible for the portraits and illustrations. The portrait of H.R.H. the Duke of Cornwall is the result of the first sitting given by the Duke to an Australian artist.

Mr. Fred. Wishaw's new novel, 'A Forbidden Name,' the scene of which is laid at the court of Catherine the Great, will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus on May 16. A week later the same firm will issue Mrs. L. T. Meade's new story, under the attractive title of 'This Troublesome World.' They have also in hand a new novel by A. Werner, entitled 'Chapenga's White Man.'

Among those who have lately decidedly won the favour of all interested in Australian life, as it was and really is, must be mentioned Mr. William S. Walker ('Coo-ee') whose new story, entitled 'Virgin Gold,' is about appearing. It is copiously illustrated and will be published by Mr. John Long, who has published all Mr. Walker's books. Mr. Walker comes of a good old Colonial stock. His father was one of the most respected pioneers, and was known throughout New South Wales. It may not be generally known that Mr. William S. Walker is the nephew of 'Rolf Boldrewood.'

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. hope to have ready next week a volume of sermons by the Rev. Edward Henry Bickersteth, D.D., late Bishop of Exeter.

* *

'The Northumberland Fusiliers,' by Mr. Walter Wood, which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on May 21, is the second volume of 'British Regiments in War and Peace.' 'The ever-fighting, never-failing Fifth'—to use the words of Wellington—is one of the oldest and most illustrious regiments in the British army. It has an extraordinary number of unique distinctions, and these, as well as the battle-honours, are treated very carefully and fully by Mr. Wood. A photogravure of the badge of the regiment is given, and portraits of some of the leading officers of the corps.

The Lane lectures delivered by Sir Michael Foster, M.P., at the Cooper Medical College in San Francisco, are to be published by the Cambridge University Press, under the title of 'Lectures on the History of Physiology during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries.' The second volume of Dr. M. R. James's descriptive catalogue of the Western Manuscripts in the library of Trinity College will be issued by the University Press very shortly.

* *

Mr. John Hogg will shortly commence the issue of a series of 'Technical Handbooks on the Artistic Crafts,' under the general editorship of Mr. W. R. Letherby, a teacher of much practical experience in these subjects. The first three books of the series will be 'The Craft of Bookbinding and the Preservation of Books,' by Douglas Cockerell; 'Gold and Silver Smiths' Work,' by H. Wilson; and 'Cabinet Making and Designing,' by C. Spooner.

* *

A forthcoming volume that should attract much attention at the present time is Major-General G. Allgood's 'Letters and Journals of the China War, 1860.' As a Lieutenant the author served with the 1st Division China Field Force. The publishers are Messrs. Longmans & Co.

* *

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will shortly issue in their well-known 'Haddon Hall Library' a volume on 'Bird Watching,' by Edmund Selous, with illustrations by J. Smit. Many of these will be reproduced in photogravure; others will appear in the text. The same publishers also announce 'Surrey,' by Walter Jerrold and others, being the latest volume in 'Dent's County Guides.' The book will be divided into three parts, respectively devoted to 'Story and Scenery,' by a 'Native of the County';

'Natural History and Sports,' by experts; and a Gazetteer.

It is with great regret that we announce the death of General A. C. McClurg, the head of the large publishing and bookselling firm of A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago. The death occurred at St. Augustine, Florida, April 15, 1901.

* *

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ames, whose 'Tremendous Twins' and 'A.B.C. for Baby Patriots' have been so successful, are to issue at the end of this month, through Mr. Grant Richards, an experiment in social satire, 'The Maid's Progress,' a book of pictures in colour by Mrs. Ernest Ames and verses by Mr. Ames.

* *

'The innumerable admirers of M. Jules Verne will learn with regret that the author of so many delightful scientific fairy tales is lying very seriously ill at his residence at Amiens. M. Verne was taken suddenly unwell some three months ago, his sight being greatly affected. We learn that last week the famous writer "was slightly better," and able to sit by the open window and enjoy sunshine.'—Daily Chronicle.

* *

'Aspects of Revelation:—being the Baldwin Lectures for 1901,' by the Right Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., and 'The Catholic Church from Within,' by Lady Lovat, appear among the early announcements of Messrs. Longmans & Co. They have also the second volume of Mr. Edmond Kelly's 'Government; or, Human Evolution,' in the press. The subjects here treated of are 'Individualism and Collectivism.'

* *

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. will publish almost immediately a volume of hitherto unpublished Autograph Poems by King James the First of England and Sixth of Scotland, the existence of which, in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, has recently been discovered. Permission to print the text, with colotype reproductions, has been kindly given by Bodley's Librarian, and the volume will appear under the editorship of Mr. Robert S. Rait, Fellow of New College, Oxford. The title-page is an exact colotype reproduction, mutatis mutandis, of the beautiful title-page specially designed and engraved for the folio edition of the King's works, published under his own supervision in 1616. The text is accompanied by several colotype reproductions of the pages of the book, and, by the courteous permission of Sir Robert Gresley, Baronet, the frontispiece is a fine portrait of King James, which has never hitherto been published. The number of copies printed will be limited to 275, of which only 250 numbered copies will be for sale.

It may be remembered that some of the articles on 'No Room to Live in the Villages,' recently published by the Daily News, were from the pen of Mr. Alfred T. Story, author of 'The Martyrdom of Labour' and other works. Mr. Story has since written a short novel entitled 'Master and Slave,' which is also designed to illustrate the cruel conditions of life in agricultural districts to-day. It will be issued next week by Mr. Brimley Johnson.

'Chambers's Encyclopædia'—what is called the Twentieth Century Issue—is now being exploited by the proprietors of the Daily Express, on the new instalment system—3s. paid down, and the complete set is delivered, a beautiful, trustful confidence being placed in the purchaser that he will pay up the balance of the purchase money, in nine monthly instalments of 8s. 6d. each. As this business is to be carried on through the booksellers, the trade will doubtless be well satisfied that this new method of business will be for their interest.

* *

Mr. Grant Richards will publish on May 21 a book entitled 'Sixty Years on the Turf: the Life and Times of George Hodgman (1840–1900), owner of Emigrant, winner of the Grand National; of Paul Jones, winner of the Chester Cup; of Victor, winner of the Royal Hunt Cup; of Westminster, winner of the Cambridgeshire; (partly) of Rocket, winner of the Cesarewitch, &c., &c.' The volume is edited by Mr. Charles R. Warren (from June 1894 to October 1900, 'Kettledrum' of the Sporting Chronicle), and contains many portraits and illustrations from special oil paintings of Emigrant, Victor, Victorious, and Westminster. The truth of the old adage that on the Turf as under the turf all men are equal, is afresh exemplified in the pages of this book of 'Reminiscences' which relate the experiences of one who during an extended life has filled many parts in connection with the 'great game.' Mr. Hodgman writes, not a history of the Turf in the sense of a 'Calendar' record, but rather a book concerning the doings of the leading men of a Turf period that abounded in sensationalism, and to which the present day can offer no comparison. A chapter is devoted to a consideration of the 'invasion' of England by the American jockeys; the causes that have led to the same; and the same means of relief.

Messrs. Rivington will issue next week Volume III. of their 'Periods of European History,' entitled 'The Close of the Middle Ages, A.D. 1273–1494,' by R. Lodge, M.A., Professor of History at the University of Edinburgh.

The admirers of Jean Ingelow will be glad to hear that, although there is little likelihood of an authorised 'life' being published, 'Some Recollections of Jean Ingelow and her Friends' will be issued almost immediately by Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. The volume, which is largely of an anecdotal character, is the work of three friends of the late poet and novelist. Messrs. Wells Gardner & Co. also announce a selection of sermons preached by the Bishop of London in St. Paul's Cathedral, which they hope to publish in the autumn with the title 'Under the Dome.'

Messrs. Methuen announce many important additions to their Colonial Library. Amongst those for the autumn are the long-expected 'Life of Stevenson,' by Graham Balfour, and novels by such well-known names as Marie Corelli, Lucas Malet, Mrs. Craigie, Eden Phillpotts, A. E. W. Mason, F. F. Montresor, W. W. Jacobs, and many others, a complete list of which will be found on pages 517, 519.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. will shortly publish two volumes of considerable scientific interest in 'The Physiology of Plants,' by Dr. D. T. Macdougall, of the Botanical Gardens, Brown Park, New York, and 'Researches on Cellulose,' by C. F. Cross, E. J. Bevan, and C. Beadle. The same publishers have also in the press 'Individuality and the Moral Aim in American Education: Report presented to the Victoria University and the Gilchrist Trustees, February 1901,' by H. Thiselton Mark.

* *

On Monday next, Messrs. Gay & Bird will publish 'Penelope's Irish Experiences,' by Kate Douglas Wiggin, whose works have had such a wide success in England and America.

* *

Mr. A. Henry Savage Landor's important work on 'China and the Allies' will be issued by Mr. William Heinemann on May 30. It will be in two volumes and well illustrated.

* *

Emerson's 'Representative Men'—the third volume of the 'Temple' Emerson—will be included in Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Classics' in a few days. It will be edited by Mr. Walter Jerrold, and a portrait of Emerson as a young man will form the frontispiece.

* *

A new novel by Mr. M. P. Shiel, the author of 'The Yellow Danger,' will be published by Mr. Grant Richards on May 21, under the title of 'The Lord of the Sea.'

* *

A life of Miss Ellen Terry is being prepared by Mr. T. E. Pemberton. The biographer is receiving the assistance of Miss Ellen Terry herself, and also of Sir Henry Irving, who has promised to supply information and illustrations which would not otherwise be obtainable. Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson will publish the book in the autumn.

* *

Among the books announced for early publication by Messrs. Constable & Co. are 'Retaliation,' by Mr. Herbert Flowerdew; 'Marred in Making,' by the Baroness von Hutten; and a treatise on amateur fish culture by Mr. Charles Walker.

* *

The next volume in Mr. William Heinemann's 'Dollar Library of American Fiction' will be 'The Chronic Loafer,' by Nelson Lloyd. It will be published on May 21.

THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS' CONGRESS.

JUNE 10 to 13, 1901.

The International Publishers' Congress in London, 1899, having unanimously accepted the invitation given by the Börsenverein der Deutschen Buchhändler zu Leipzig, the fourth session of the International Publishers' Congress will be held in Leipzig from June 10 to 13, 1901. The Presidential Board is composed as follows:—

Honorary Presidents: Messrs. René Fouré (Hachette & Co.), Paris; Émile Bruylant, Brussels; John Murray, London; Kommerzienrat Carl Engelhorn, Stuttgart; Oberbürgermeister Justizrat Dr. Tröndlin, Leipzig; Gustav Zweiniger, the President of the Leipzig Chamber of Commerce.

President: Herr Albert Brockhaus, Leipzig.
Vice-Presidents: (to be nominated by the Congress).

THE C.I.V. IN SOUTH AFRICA.*

The journal, in which the experiences each day of the C.I.V.s during their participation of the campaign in South Africa have been regularly recorded, was originally intended for private circulation only, but has now been published at the request of many members of the regiment. Being of a thoroughly simple and unambitious character, it affords a better idea of the routine of active service, with its accompanying hardships and privations, difficulties and dangers, than many a more pretentious volume would do. The entries chiefly refer to the infantry battalion under the Commandant—Major-General W. H. Mackinnon—for, owing to the exigencies of war, the three divisions of the regiment were unfortunately so scattered over the field of operations that it was possible only to deal with one company, and this naturally was the body with which the author was more constantly associated. Some interesting particulars are given in regard to the composition of the force. It apparently embraced men of very varied class. A sentry on being asked his profession replied, 'I have none, sir, but my amusement in life is archæology, and I was going this very week to Athens and the Levant.' Another man who was noticed to be remarkably steady on his pins during the voyage out was ascertained, on inquiry, to be the owner of a pleasure yacht. Of 500 men on board 147 were teetotalers, which should be good news for the temperance party. Considering the nature of the force it is a little surprising to learn that Commandant Mackinnon found 'some of the volunteer sergeants very deficient in the knowledge how to instruct, or even drill their men without instruction,' while some of the men were ignorant of the most elementary detail of drill. In this connection the author somewhat humorously remarks that the conversational style of issuing commands to strong squads of men is not conducive to efficiency. The regulars seem to have good-naturedly chaffed the volunteers when the occasion offered. Once when the C.I.V.s were in a miserable plight, their commanding officer was asked by a Grenadier (who put his head out of a train for the purpose), 'Well, sir, and how do you like the army now?' On another occasion, as Lieutenant Trotter, towards the close of a long march, was walking with his head down past some of the Derbyshire regiment, one of them was heard to say, 'Don't he wish himself back at the Mansion House!' A useful feature of the production is the list of the men of all grades comprising the C.I.V.s, which is given in an appendix to the work. Nor should mention be omitted of the many interesting illustrations reproduced from photographs. The volume in its pretty and artistic binding should form an interesting souvenir, which we are sure the men of the corps will warmly cherish.

EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY TOKENS USED BY BOOKSELLERS.

10 Spencer Street, Leamington:
April 18, 1901.

DEAR SIR,—As you have been publishing a few articles upon the 'Booksellers of the Past,' in order to supplement the same I thought you might like to give a complete list of the eighteenth-century tokens issued by the trade.

Should you care to print the same, I shall be pleased to place the same at your disposal. I might add, a full list of the minor varieties of the dies, and the various edge reading, &c., will be found in James Atkins's 'Tokens of the Eighteenth Century.'

I beg to remain,

Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR W. WATERS.

R. B. Marston, Esq.

A LIST OF THE 18TH-CENTURY TOKENS ISSUED BY PUBLISHERS, PRINTERS, BOOKSELLERS, &c.

The Government under George III. issued no copper coin between the years 1776 and 1796 (inclusive). This neglect caused the issue and circulation of the 18th-century tokens, of which these form a section representing the bookselling and printing trades. The tokens had to supply the traders with the necessary small change for commercial use.

- E. 'Payable at Clachar & Co.'s, Chelmsford, Essex.'

In 1790 this firm was represented by William Clachar. In the contemporary directory his businesses were: 'Bookseller, Printer, Bookbinder, Distributor of Stamps, Agent to the Sun Fire Office, Appraiser, Auctioneer, Medical Warehouse, and Public Library.' When the firm became Clachar & Co. they probably extended their business by including a few more branches. Truly it must have been a kind of 18th-century 'Whiteley's.'

KENT.

DEAL.

- O. A Man of War. 'The Guard & Glory of G' Britain.'
- R. Cinque Ports arms between branches of oak. 'Deal Halfpenny Token'; above the shield, '1794.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.
- E. 'Payable at Richard Long's Library.'

DOVER.

- O. Bust to right. 'The R. Hon. W. Pitt. Lord Warden Cinque Ports.'

R. Arms of Dover. 'Cinque Ports Token payable at Dover'; above the shield, '1795.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'At Horn's Library.'

O. Bust full-faced. 'R. Hon. W. Pitt. Lord Warden Cinque Ports.'

R. Same as last. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at Lancaster, London, or Bristol.' This last token is very rare, as the obverse die failed after very few pieces had been struck. The issuer, John Horn, was a freeholder in the town of Dover; he is described in the contemporary directory as 'Bookseller, Stationer, Perfumer, Proprietor of the Apollo Circulating Library and Public Reading Rooms, and Organist.' The library and reading rooms were situated in King Street.

MIDDLESEX.

LONDON.

O. A female seated, representing London, holding a shield bearing the City arms, a view of St. Paul's in distance. 'Sise Lane Halfpenny.' Exergue, '1795.'

R. A crown supported by a triangle held by two hands. 'King. Lords. Commons.' In the centre of triangle, 'Br. Constitution.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at the house of T. & R. Davidson.'

There is a slight variety of the reverse die of this token, and also another reading ('Davidsons') on the edge. The issuers were Pocket-book Makers at 14 Sise Lane. In 1790 the firm was Davidson & Field; early in the last century the business was carried on by Ayers & Co. at the same address. Thomas and Robert Davidson were Liverymen of the City of London, and members of the Stationers' Company.

O. 'Denton / dealer / in coins / Hospital Gate / Smithfield.' In six lines.

R. Two busts facing. 'We Three Blockheads Be.' '1795.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

This obverse die is used with the following reverses:—

R. Within a radiation, the Royal Crown. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

R. A cart on the quay side unloading into a ship. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

R. A figure of a dwarf. 'Sir Jeffery Dunstan.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

Matthew Denton also issued some farthing tokens from 7 Mead Row, Lambeth. He was a publisher by trade, although it is not mentioned on his Smithfield tokens.

O. Bust to left, upon a ribbon below the bust—'Frangas non Flectes.' Legend, 'D. I. Eaton three times acquitted of sedition.'

R. A representation of the Republican cock crowing over the English swine in the pig sty. 'Printer to the Majesty of the People. London. 1795.'

E. Milled. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

This token was issued by Daniel Isaac Eaton, at his publishing house, 'The Cock and Swine,' Newgate Street. He was the writer of many political pamphlets against the Government of his day. He died in great poverty at Deptford in 1814.

O. An old-fashioned hand printing-press. 'Sic Oritur Doctrina Surgetque Libertas. 1794.'

R. 'Payable/at/the Franklin/Press/London.' In five lines. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'An Asylum for the Oppress'd of all Nations.' This token is also struck with a plain edge.

O. Bust to left. 'J. Lackington. 1794.'

R. Fame blowing a trumpet. 'Halfpenny of J. Lackington & Co., cheapest booksellers in the world.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at Lackington & Co.'s, Finsbury Square, London.'

O. Similar to last, but with a quatre-foil at the end of legend.

R. Fame blowing a trumpet. 'Halfpenny of Lackington, Allen & Co., cheapest book-sellers in the world.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at the Temple of the Muses.'

O. Bust to right. 'J. Lackington.' Below the bust a small cross.

R. The same as last. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at London or Dublin.'

O. Bust to right. 'J. Lackington.' Below the bust. 'Finsbury Square, 1795.'

R. The same as last. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. 'Payable at the Temple of the Muses.'

These tokens, issued by the celebrated firm of Lackington, were struck in large quantities; there are several minor varieties of dies, a full description of which will be found in Atkins's 'Tokens of the Eighteenth Century.'

O. View of Newgate Prison. 'Newgate.' Exergue, 'MDCCXCIV.'

R. 'Payable / at / the residence / of Messrs. Symonds / Winterbotham / Ridgway / & Holt.' In eight lines. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. Milled.

O. A similar view, but the building has a square top. 'Newgate.' Exergue, '1795.'

R. Same as last. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

E. Milled.

These tokens were struck to celebrate the imprisonment for sedition of Messrs. H. D. Symonds, Bookseller, 23 Paternoster Row; Rev. W. Winterbotham, of How's Lane Chapel, Plymouth; J. Ridgway, Publisher, 1 York Street, St. James's; and D. Holt, the proprietor and publisher of the Newark Herald. They were struck in large quantities, and circulated to advertise the extreme rigour of the law against sedition, and so possibly stir up further disruption among the populace. It was a grim joke making the tokens payable at the prison. Although the tokens were not issued by a member of the publishing trade itself, three members of it were mentioned upon the pieces, so they have been included in this brief list. There are several minor varieties, all of which are described in Mr. Atkins's work.

O. An anchor upon a shield between a wreath of laurel, above which is a Cap of Liberty. 'London Commercial Token. 1796.'

R. Arms of London, resting upon the Sword and Mace. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

Although no issuer's name is given upon this token it was struck and issued by T. Prattent, Printer and Engraver, 46 Cloth Fair, West Smithfield. He engraved many of the copperplates for the contemporary magazine literature.

O. Bust to left. 'T. Spence, 7 months imprisonment for high treason.' Below the bust, 'James' (die sinker's name). '1794.'

R. T. Spence / Bookseller / Dealer in / Prints & Coins / N. 8 / Little / Turnstile / Holbob (sic) / London.' In nine lines. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

O. Same as last.

R. 'T. / Spence / Bookseller / Dealer in / Prints & Coins.' In seven lines. 'Little Turnstile No. 8 Holborn, London.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

O. A pig trampling upon the emblems of Church and State. Upon a label issuing from the pig's mouth: 'Pig's Meat, published by T. Spence, London.' Above which is a Cap of Liberty.

R. 'Thos. Spence / Sir Thos More / Thos Paine. Noted Advocates for the Rights of Man.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

O. Bust to left. 'T. Spence, a State Prisoner in 1794.' Below the bust, 'James' (die sinker's name).

R. A pig standing upon the emblems of Church and State. 'Pig's Meat, published by T. Spence, London.' Above the pig is a Cap of Liberty radiated. $\frac{1}{2}d$.

O. A cat. 'In Society Live Free Like Me. 1795.' Under the cat, 'James' (die sinker's name).

R. A hand holding a book which is inscribed 'Pig's Meat.' Outer legend: 'If Lords all mankind are then they ye rents shoud' share.' $\frac{1}{2}d$.

These tokens form part of a very long series issued by Thomas Spence. He was the author of many tracts and pamphlets written against the Government of the day. 'Pig's Meat; or, Lessons for the Swinish Multitude,' was a weekly publication advocating Republican principles.

A BOOK ON OUR EMPIRE.*

This volume is the first of a series of five, of which the succeeding four will be devoted to Great Britain in Asia, in Africa, in America, and in Australasia. 'What do they know of England who only England know?' is the fit quotation from Rudyard Kipling heading an Introduction which tells us: 'These volumes are the outcome of a desire to increase the prevailing knowledge of our Imperial heritage, that its value may be enriched by intelligent endeavour and patriotism on our part and on our children's part after us. They represent an effort to furnish general readers and students with a knowledge of the materials which have been used in the building of the British Empire, and of the results which have opened up to our people innumerable opportunities of benefiting the human race.' This is a laudable endeavour, and we gladly welcome 'Our Empire' as a good sign of the times. The needs of the student and of the general reader, however, are unfortunately not quite identical; and while we trust the general reader, who too often picks up his scanty knowledge of geography from maps of those expensive object-lessons provided for him by the Boer War, may have learnt something lately about British South Africa, we question whether, at least in so far as he is concerned, for 'prevailing knowledge' one might not still read 'prevailing ignorance' of many of our colonial possessions; and we have a not quite unwarranted suspicion that many foreigners have a far more practical and thorough knowledge of the possessions and resources of Great Britain than is possessed by the bulk of our population. This regrettable state of things is partly attributable to the inaccurate but generally stereotyped geographical and historical text-books which held possession of our schools from generation to generation until within the memory of persons still living, and partly to the school teacher, who was often crassly ignorant and, being miserably treated and remunerated, performed his duties in the most perfunctory fashion. We regret to note in this book, which is full of the good and brave deeds of our forefathers, sentences beginning: 'It was not until such or such a year that this or that was done. The superficial School Board scholar may be excused for thinking that Rome ought to have been built in a day; nevertheless, neither individuals nor nations spring full-grown into life; and if we are reminded that it was not until 1834 that slavery throughout the British colonies was abolished, let it also not be forgotten that a statesman so enlightened and high-minded as Mr. Gladstone delivered his maiden speech in defence of what was long one of the institutions of the United States, and that his father was one of 'those who profited by the nefarious practice.' With this reservation we warmly commend this instructive and interesting work, which is in all respects admirably produced.

BOOK SALES.

Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, and Hodge began on Monday, and continued on Tuesday and Wednesday, a four days' sale of valuable books and MSS. The more important books on Monday were the following:—A Copy of the Letters . . . of Henry the Eighth to Martyn Luther, and 'Also the Copy of the Aforesaid Luther's Letter,' printed by R. Pynson about 1528—£50 (Quaritch); R. Burns, 'Poems,' 1794, presentation copy from the author to Thomas Whiter, with inscription—£65 (W. Brown); Ben Jonson, 'His Art of Poetry' &c., 1640—836 (Sabin); Sir Philip Sidney, 'The Defence of Poesie,' printed for William Ponsonby, 1595—£120 (Quaritch); J. Milton, 'Of Education,' 1644, a single sheet of eight numbered pages—£74 10s. (Sabin); W. Painter, 'The Palace of Pleasure' &c., and the 'second tome' of the same, 1566-67—£170 (Brewer); Sir P. Sidney, 'His Astrophel and Stella,' 1591, a large and fine copy of this remarkably rare edition, of which the only other example known is in the Bodleian library—£200 (Quaritch); R. Burton, 'The Anatomy of Melancholy,' 1621—£42 (Denham); T. Ravenscroft, 'A Briefe Discourse . . . in Measurable Musick,' 1614, with 40 pages of musical notations—£58 (Pickering); M. de Montaigne, 'The Essayes,' translated by John Florio, 1603—£51 (Denham); R. Higden, 'Polycricon,' translated by John of Trevisa and printed by W. de Worde, 1495, title and colophon in facsimile—£67 (Pickering). The most interesting of the books sold on Tuesday was a small quarto volume of 173 pages, consisting of transcripts of letters by Ben Jonson, George Chapman, and other distinguished personages of the period 1580-1610, all, or nearly all, unpublished—£105 (Martin). The more important of the printed books sold on Tuesday were the following:—Fanny Burney, 'Evelina,' 1778—£45 (Denham); O. B., 'Questions of Profitable and Pleasant Concernings, talked of by Two Olde Seniors' &c., 1594—£39 (Bolton); R. Allot, 'England's Parnassus,' 1600—£50 (Cockerell); Jane Porter, 'The Scottish Chiefs,' 1810—£27 (Cockerell); J. de La Fontaine, 'Contes et Nouvelles en vers,' 1762, the Fermiers généraux edition—£33. 10s. (Bumpus); and 'The History of Friar Rush,' 1649—£76 (Bolton). Wednesday's sale contained several lots of unusual interest, including an octavo volume of six tracts, issued from about 1578 to 1650, all of which were unknown to bibliographers until the descriptions were published in Mr. Hazlitt's last volume of 'Bibliographical Notes,' and of which no other copies have yet been discovered. 'Of these six tracts, the most importance,' says the Times, 'is attached to the one with the title "School Lawes or Qui Mihi in English Verse, by J. M.," and printed in 1650; this is believed to be the work of John Milton, who about this period was a tutor, and who had not long before composed his celebrated "Tractate on Education"—£41 (Quaritch). Another interesting lot consisted of official copies of 45 letters addressed by General the Hon. Seymour Conway, Secretary of State, 1765-66, to the governors of various provinces of the English colonies in America during the most critical period in their history in connexion with the mother country, and all probably unprinted—£40 (E. G. Allen).' The day's sale realised £903, and the total for the three days was £4,191. 13s. At the time of going to press the report of the fourth day's sale had not reached us.

COLONIAL BOOKSELLERS.

Our present issue being our usual Annual Export Number, we have thought it well to commence the issue of a series of sketches of Colonial Booksellers, which we intend to continue at intervals. One of the oldest and one of the youngest, MR. HUTCHINSON and MR. MILLER, are here brought face to face.

M. L. HUTCHINSON,
MELBOURNE.

Mr. Hutchinson may be regarded as one of the oldest of colonial booksellers, as well as one of the most enterprising. His name stands prominently and honourably forward, not only as a bookseller but as a public-spirited member of the community in the midst of which he resides. We cannot do better, perhaps, than quote the following interesting account of him from a work entitled 'Victoria and its Metropolis': 'M. L. Hutchinson, J.P., Melbourne.—The business of this establishment originally commenced in 1853 as an agency of the celebrated

M. L. HUTCHINSON

Scottish publishing firm of Messrs. Blackie & Sons, Glasgow. The business was begun first in Sydney, and subsequently in Melbourne, and consisted principally of the introduction of Messrs. Blackie & Sons' splendid standard works of reference into the homes and public libraries of the Colonies by Mr. Robert Mackay, the founder of the business; the present proprietor, Mr. M. L. Hutchinson, being associated with him, having had charge of the general details from the commencement. The Melbourne business was first established in Bourke Street. In 1860 it was removed to Elizabeth Street, and in 1870 to the Glasgow Book Warehouse, Collins Street, West. Although it has retained its original name, and is still the leading depôt for Glasgow publications, both in literature and stationery, many new and important fields have been opened up. Mr. Hutchinson now imports from all the principal publishing firms of Great Britain, as well as a host of home and American periodicals. The distinctive feature of this business is a highly commendable one—the diffusion of a sound, healthy literature—and to this end no pains have been spared. Mr.

Hutchinson is also well known as a publisher, the works of many widely esteemed authors having been introduced to the public by his agency both here and in London. He also publishes useful maps of Melbourne and its suburbs, its railways, and its tramways, and issues the Australian Almanac (now in its forty-second year), the oldest in Melbourne. He represented at the International Exhibition Messrs. W. & R. Chambers, whose publications secured the gold medal, and a number of other publishing firms of London and Edinburgh, and was also the publisher of the Centennial Exhibition Catalogues of the General Exhibits and Fine Arts.

Personally, Mr. Hutchinson has been known to us for more than a generation. His correspondence has always been of that candid, honest, straightforward character that we must say these few words by way of expressing our esteem for him and the pleasure which his correspondence has always afforded us.

He now writes:—'While years go by, leaving me to live on the memory of the past, I am not yet laid aside, although "slowing down," so that when my two sons with me in the business take the command it will be easier for them to build from where their father left off than to do the rough bedrock business of the early colonial life those who started in "the fifties" had to go through. I was Sessions Clerk of the Brunswick Presbyterian Church for over thirty years; but this I have given up recently owing to a sore accident, being run down by a mad cyclist and much injured. However, I am thankful to say I am better. I am still the Hon. Secretary of the Visiting Committee of the State Industrial Schools, Royal Park, and I am now busy preparing for the first Federal Election of Senate and House of Representatives, being Returning Officer for the Carlton Electorate, and have conducted seven Elections as such, and Chief Deputy Returning Officer for the Senate in the same electorate. As regards recent publications I have issued, the most successful is a School Geography, of which the seventieth thousand was issued to-day, bringing it up to date in changing "Colony" to "State," and "Queen" to "King," &c., &c., with all the changes in the Commonwealth and South Africa. I have generally got on well with those whose co-operation I have had in public and private life, and I have just learned that my deputies and clerks in the conducting of the past Parliamentary elections have resolved to present me with their portraits in combination with their chief, but of this I will know more shortly.'

Interesting notices of Mr. Hutchinson have already appeared in this country in the Christian Herald and in the British Workman a few years ago, and we can hardly do better than close this article by giving the following extract from 'Temperance in Australia,' a memorial volume of the International Convention, Melbourne, 1888:—

'Mr. M. L. Hutchinson was for many years an active worker in municipal matters, and was twice elected to the Borough Council of Brunswick. He was unanimously elected Mayor in 1880-81, and secured the esteem of his fellow councillors and ratepayers generally. He was the last Mayor who filled the office before the borough, now a town, was divided into wards, and only retired from municipal life because of his removal to Carlton, within the city, where he now resides.

'To show the appreciation of his conduct in fulfilling his public duties the Council immediately took steps to have him placed on the Commission of the Peace, and his appointment was made without any political influence, his name appearing singly in the Government Gazette, and not in a batch as is usually done. He also served the district in which he resided as member of the State School Board for six years from the passing of the Act in 1872, and was chairman when the first school was erected in Brunswick under that Act. He was also one of the first to propose and carry out the Mechanics' Institute and Free Library, and other institutions.'

THOMAS MASKEW MILLER,

CAPETOWN.

Though one of the youngest, Mr. Miller has already won for himself the reputation of being one of the most enterprising and intelligent of our Colonial brethren. He was born in the City of Capetown in 1864, and he is therefore now only about thirty-seven years old. His grandfather went out at the taking of the Cape by the British in 1805, and his grandmother was directly descended from the Huguenots who took refuge in South Africa after the Edict of Nantes, so that he may be regarded as a genuine typical 'Colonial.' In 1877 he was apprenticed to the firm of Darter Brothers & Walton, with whom he remained till 1893, leaving them, to open business for himself in premises at 94 Adderley Street, in which a bookseller's business had been carried on—not very successfully—for half a century. Ill-luck, however, seems to have departed from the premises immediately he took them over and success quickly followed. In 1896, he found No. 94 far too small for his growing business, so he moved next door into what, we are told, is now one of the best-equipped book-stores in South Africa. The premises have a depth of 60 feet with a frontage of 30 feet. The ground floor is 14 feet high, and the walls being lined with double shelves of books from floor to ceiling, the effect of the display is most imposing.

It was a surprise to us to learn from Mr. Miller that he has not yet visited this country, the land of his forefathers. All the greater is the surprise because he always writes with an apparently intimate knowledge of all the ins and outs of the London trade both as regards books and stationery. Though he looks on himself primarily as a bookseller, stationery and artists' materials and school furniture form important branches of the business. The educational department has developed very rapidly and bids fair to become one of the most extensive in the country. He is a Government contractor for the supply of school materials, stationery, and draughtsmen's materials to several Departments of the Colonial Governments.

In 1898 Mr. Miller opened a branch at Bulawayo, where he now has a specially constructed store 50 by 30, well fitted and fully stocked. The store is looked on as one of the surprises of Bulawayo—and well it may be, remembering what Bulawayo was a few short years ago. This branch is under the active and intelligent management of Mr. O. Ellis Allen.

Of course it need hardly be said that the rapid success of the business has not been achieved without constant personal attention and very hard work on the part of T. M. Miller and his men, for he has now a large staff of active and intelligent assistants.

In 1900, Mr. E. Slade Jones was admitted as a partner, and he has now the control of the stationery department.

It is unnecessary to say that there are several other old, long established, most highly respectable firms of booksellers in Capetown who are carrying on flourishing businesses there, probably long before Mr. Miller was born. It is out of no disrespect for them that the youngest and not the least enterprising of them all has been selected as one of the examples of what promises to be a successful career among those who are engaged in the distribution of English literature, and in promoting English education in one of the largest, and, just now, the most interesting colony of the British Empire.

MR. CROCKETT'S NEW BOOK.*

Mr. Crockett has seldom written a novel of greater brilliancy or more stirring incident than 'The Silver Skull,' while the heroic tinge which he so well knows how to impart to his fiction, has never been employed to more excellent advantage than now. The reader of mature years, whose misfortune it is to be a professional critic, almost sighs for the days of glorious imaginative youth, when a ready perception and an infinite amount of credulity would have enabled him to enjoy such a thrilling romance to its utmost. It scarcely does to be analytical and matter-of-fact in reading Mr. Crockett's works—to study his method very closely, coolly note how the plot is built up, and scrutinise the details of his workmanship. His stories must be perused in a state of feverish excitement, with throbbing veins and tingling nerves. And for this Mr. Crockett affords his ordinary reader every opportunity. No writer of the present day can more dexterously unfold the plot of a romance, or with greater effectiveness of word-painting work up to the climax of a situation. Many of his sentences, if taken separately, would no doubt sound meaningless and inflated; but when viewed in the aggregate, especially by a reader whose brain is on fire from a constant supply of animated brilliantly coloured episodes, only the influence of impressive picturesqueness is felt. In 'The Silver Skull' Mr. Crockett, as usual, lays firm hold of his listeners in the first chapter, and he retains their attention with most enjoyable intensity to the end. There is a buoyancy and vivacity in his writing which is peculiarly fascinating. Page follows page bearing the record of the gallant band of banditti, the Vardarelli, and the mysterious doings of that infamous society known as 'The Silver Skull,' of which the cruel impassive priest Ciro Annicharico is the moving spirit; and the reader sits as under a spell, from which he is powerless to release himself until the concluding lines are reached. The story commences with a cold-blooded murder, or rather massacre, and ends appropriately enough with the death punishment of the chief offender. It does not do, as we have said, to look too closely into Mr. Crockett's work, and the same may be said with equal force of the illustrations. In themselves they are effective enough, but they scarcely bear out the representations of the text. In one case only two actors are spoken of as being on the scene; in the illustration there are three. The side of a hill is depicted as a plain, and so on. One would almost think they had never been designed for the book. But this, after all, is a trifle in face of so much other merit.

* 'The Silver Skull,' by S. R. Crockett. London: Smith, Elder & Co.

A QUESTION OF DISCOUNT.

A curious dispute has arisen between Paris publishers and a provincial bookseller. It was dealt with yesterday in the Ninth Correctional Chamber. A Guingamp bookseller complained that the publishing syndicates obliged his trade to give no more than 20 per cent. discount. The Guingamp man disregarded this rule, and allowed his customers a much larger discount, he himself getting 40 per cent. Accordingly the firms of Hachette, Bélin, Delagrave, Larousse, and others refused to supply him. The Publishers and Booksellers' Syndicate contended that they had made the rule about the 20 per cent. because authors complained that they received little, if any, of the 3*fr.* 50*c.* charged for each volume. The Guingamp man summoned the big firms for conspiracy, or cornering, and affirmed that his business was conducted on honest lines. The Public Prosecutor, in his speech, said that there were books and books, and that each volume had a separate character, according to the reputation of the author. He also denied that books could be subjected to the ordinary laws of supply and demand, for, besides the ordinary material in them, they contained the product of the writer's intellect. This product, said the official, M. Bruyant, was human thought, which could not be monopolised or cornered even by an American trust. It was not as sugar or vitriol. Finally the tribunal decided against the Guingamp bookseller, who has to bear the costs of the case.—From the Daily Telegraph, May 6.

AUSTRALIAN VERSE.*

Mr. Lawson, whose volume of poems now lies before us, is no new claimant for public favour. His collection of Australian stories, 'While the Billy Boils' and 'On the Track,' met with a most favourable reception here as well as in Australia; and his first volume of poems, entitled 'When the World was Wide,' achieved a well-merited success. The pieces in this collection plainly show that their author is no mere maker of verses; albeit the late Lord Macaulay's schoolboy doubtless knew, if up-to-date scholars do not, that the poet who is said to be born and not made derives his name from the Greek word signifying a maker or producer. These verses are evidently not made, but begotten of a mind and a heart tempered by varied experiences. The opening piece is a spirited storm picture, 'The Ports of the Open Sea.' Here is one verse—

'For the South-East lands are dread lands
To the sailor in the shrouds,
When the low clouds loom like headlands,
And the black bluffs blur like clouds,
When the breakers rage to windward,
And the lights are masked a-lee,
And the sunken rocks run inward
To a Port of the Open Sea.'

* 'Verses, Popular and Humorous,' by Henry Lawson. Sydney: Angus & Robertson; London: Australian Book Company.

'Foreign Lands' is a lament for the old days when there were still unknown regions to be explored, 'ere the steamship and the cable did away with Foreign Lands,' and for the time when 'the bravest hearts of England sailed away to Foreign Lands.'

'Love and pride of life inspired them, when the simple village hearts Followed Master Will and Harry—gone abroad to "furrin parts"—
By our townships and our cities, and across the desert sands,
Are the graves of those who fought and died for us in Foreign Lands—
Gave their young lives for our sake
(Was it all a grand mistake?)
Sons of Master Will and Harry born abroad in Foreign Lands!'

We strongly recommend this book to readers who like unconventional lyrics that really express the emotions of the writer. All are good, whether serious or comic; but we have been most struck by the following: 'The Christ of the "Never"'; 'The Cattle-dog's Death'; 'The Ballad of the Rouseabout'; 'The Uncultured Rhymers and their Cultured Critics'; and 'The Writer's Dream.'

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS.

To Continental booksellers and travellers it will no doubt be of interest to know that, for the future, Murray's Travellers' Handbooks will be published by Mr. Edward Stanford, of 12, 13, and 14 Long Acre.

Mr. Murray has transferred both the English and Foreign Guides (with the exception of India and Japan, which he keeps in his own hands) to Mr. Stanford, who has recently given up his general bookselling and stationery business in order to devote himself more fully to geographical works in all their branches.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Pasha,' by Daisy Hugh Pryce. Miss Pryce has again employed her knowledge of Turkish life to excellent purpose, and her novel has all the charm of an Eastern idyll. Practically, there are only two characters in the book—the handsome, resolute Pasha, whose nobility of aspect covers a disposition full of the tenderest, loftiest emotions, and the sweet English girl, Magdalen West, who, finding herself friendless and penniless in Constantinople, consents to enter the establishment of the distinguished potentate as governess to his young brother, and eventually is persuaded to marry him. The story of the Pasha's wooing is certain to enlist the strong sympathy of the romantic reader, who will heartily rejoice when such deep devotion is rewarded by an equal return of affection. But there are obstacles that for some time threaten the happiness of the lovers. The Pasha's mother, an old lady of evil temper and extreme dignity, whose figure is common to most descriptions of harem life, acts up to her known reputation of causing trouble, while another, if less formidable, mischief-maker is found in the person of a lying, thieving Armenian. However, the story ends peacefully enough, and of the married couple it may be said, in the words of the winding-up so beloved by all Turkish tale-tellers, 'They were blessed by Allah, they lived happily, they attained their desires—and may you, O my reader, attain your desires likewise!'

From Messrs. J. Baker & Sons, Clifton.—'Gleams through the Gloom,' by Marcus C. Richards. The many pleasant characteristics

observable in the author's previous volumes of verse are again happily apparent in his present production. To a simple, unaffected but expressive style, Mr. Richards unites a keen sympathy with Nature in her many varying moods, and his poetic fancy, if it never takes a very lofty flight, is always tuneful and inspiring. The lover of out-door life, whose thoughts incline to verse, will find him throughout these pages an extremely pleasant companion.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Decorative Illustration of Books, Old and New,' by Walter Crane. The issue of a second edition of this volume in the 'Ex-libris' series deserves something more than a few lines recording the fact. The book is one that will appeal strongly not only to students of art, but to readers of illustrated literature generally. Mr. Crane lays no claim to exhaustive treatment of his subject. This, indeed, would have been impossible within the limits at his disposal, even supposing he had had sufficient leisure from his usual work of designing, but he has nevertheless written a highly interesting and informative treatise. His main object has not been to give a complete historical account of the decoration and illustration of books, but rather to dwell on the artistic treatment of the page from his own point of view as a designer. The earlier portion of the book, however, furnishes a very fair idea of the development of style and variation of treatment of both the MS. and printed book under different influences from the sixth to the close of the sixteenth century. Afterwards the record necessarily progresses at a much quicker date until we come to the latter half of the nineteenth century, when a leisurely pace is once more resumed. Among the many artists whose work is now spoken of are Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Arthur Hughes, William Morris, Selwyn Image, Henry Ryland, C. S. Ricketts, Aubrey Beardsley, Henry Payne, Charles Robinson, R. Anning Bell, J. D. Batten, William Strang, Howard Pyle, Will. H. Bradley, and the members of what is known as the Birmingham School. The book, as we have said, is exceedingly interesting, though not entirely free from bias.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'The Warden of the Marches,' by Sydney C. Grier. Illustrated. We forget who the distinguished cynic was who asserted that women create half the troubles they assist the men with such soothing sympathy to bear. There can at least be no doubt that he was a horrid bachelor. But the mischief that a foolish headstrong girl, gifted with a wonderfully subjugating smile, can make is forcibly brought home to us in Miss Grier's charming novel. The young lady in question, Mabel North, suddenly puts in an appearance from England at her married brother's place at Alabad, and though troubles have no doubt been gathering before her arrival, she forthwith proceeds to give a more acute turn to the situation by her presence. For not only does the English Commissioner, a man who is at direct variance with Major North in regard to the control of native questions, fall in love with her, but she also attracts the obnoxious attentions of Bahram Khan, the designing unscrupulous nephew of the Amir of Nalapur. However, it would perhaps be unjust to saddle her with all the complications that arise, though undoubtedly she has a distinct influence in the matter. These complications are of a highly thrilling nature, culminating in a revolt of the neighbouring tribes and a terrific bombardment of the English fort. The 'Warden of the Marches' is one Sinjā Kilin Sahib, sometime dead, but whose ghost, mounted on a fiery steed and with a loud clank of military accoutrements, at intervals visits the outposts. So long as he rides and thus keeps careful watch, no harm, according to local tradition, can happen to the loyal population. The story is remarkably exciting, and though readers will in the first place be chiefly attracted by the estimable qualities of Major and Mrs. North, even the heroine, before the story comes to a conclusion, shows that there is much real good in her disposition which it only required a few hardships to bring to the surface. One of the most consistently drawn characters in the book is that of Mr. Burgrave, the Commissioner, a man of rigid integrity, which he has a most unfortunate faculty of exhibiting to the worst advantage.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited.—The May number of the Magazine of Art is chiefly noticeable for an appreciative article on 'The Work of Edwin Hayes, R.H.A., R.I.,' from the pen of Mr. W. L. Woodroffe, with reproductions of several of the artist's best-known pictures. The frontispiece, delicately printed in colours, is 'A Study of Sea and Sky off Tarifa,' by Mr. Hayes. Among the other more notable articles of an especially attractive number are 'Modern Steamship Decoration,' by W. Shaw-Sparrow, with illustrations taken from the steamships 'Malta' and 'India' in the P. & O. Service; 'Daniel Chester French, the American Sculptor,' with a portrait and several specimen illustrations of his work; 'The Newly Discovered Frescoes of Boscoreale,' by 'Leader Scott'; and the seventh of Mr. M. H. Spielmann's articles on the 'Gems of the Wallace Collection, being reproductions of many of the most admirable pictures at Hertford House.' In the matter of art intelligence, whether from abroad or at home, the magazine seems to be particularly well posted.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Her Royal Highness Woman,' by Max O'Rell. A very entertaining volume indeed, full of those delicate, yet telling little criticisms of human personality which amuse while they inform. Whether writing of 'Women's Influence for Good and Evil,' 'The Selection of Life Partners,' 'The Gentle Art of Ruling a Husband,' 'Courtship in France and England,' 'The Woman Hater,' 'The French Wife,' 'The English Wife,' 'The British Matron,' 'The American Girl,' or 'Petticoat Government,' Mr. Max O'Rell is always sprightly and vivacious, while the maxims he lays down for the better furtherance of the happiness of married couples shows a considerable amount of worldly wisdom concealed under his disguise of the jester. The book to a large extent is a contrast between English, French, and American women. Possibly here and there the author's humour may seem a little forced, but a man of so volatile, flamboyant a disposition must naturally aim wide of the mark now and again. He is at least never tedious or dull, and the reader, quick to appreciate sly touches of drollery, will have frequent occasion for laughter. Our own advice would be to take the volume in snatches like glasses of a good old wine. The palate will then never become satiated, and the piquancy of the book will be keenly appreciated to the last page.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Another Woman's Territory,' by 'Alien.' It has been our good fortune of late to meet with several novels of more than average merit, and now we have to thank 'Alien' for a distinctly readable story, well conceived, unswerving in execution, and particularly noticeable for several excellent studies of character. Howard Grey is an author of the

MESSRS. METHUEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

Messrs. METHUEN have much pleasure in announcing that they will publish the following Books during the autumn in their well-known 'Colonial Library.' The Series comprises Copyright Books by Eminent and Popular Authors, published as far as possible simultaneously with their appearance in England. They are of very handsome appearance, being printed on antique paper, and bound tastefully in crimson paper or in cloth. They fall into two divisions—(1) Fiction; (2) General Literature.

General Literature.

The Life of Robert Louis Stevenson. By GRAHAM BALFOUR. Demy 8vo.

This highly interesting biography has been entrusted by Mr. Stevenson's family to his cousin, Mr. Balfour, and all available materials have been placed at his disposal. The book is rich in unpublished MSS. and letters, diaries of travel, reminiscences of friends, and a valuable fragment of autobiography. It also contains a complete bibliography of all Stevenson's work. The biography of one of the most attractive and sympathetic personalities in English literature should possess a most fascinating interest. The book will be uniform with the Edinburgh Edition.

Fiction.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A New Novel.

Mrs Marie Corelli's new novel, which will be published in September or October, is a long and highly important one, dealing, as in 'The Master Christian,' with issues which are moving the public mind profoundly. The book will be of considerable length.

By LUCAS MALET, Author of 'The Wages of Sin.'

Sir Richard Calmady. A Romance.

This is the first long and elaborate book by Lucas Malet since 'The Wages of Sin.' It is a romance on realistic lines, and will probably be one of the most important novels of 1901.

This novel, the scene of which is laid in the moorland and finest country of the northern part of Hampshire, in London, and in Naples, opens in the year of grace 1842. The action covers a period of about three and thirty years; and deals with the experiences and adventures of an English country gentleman of an essentially normal type of character, subjected—owing to somewhat distressing antecedent circumstances—to very abnormal conditions of life. The book is frankly a romance; but it is also a frankly realistic and modern one.

By MRS. CRAIGIE (John Oliver Hobbes), Author of 'Robert Orange.'

The Serious Wooing.

By W. W. JACOBS, Author of 'Many Cargoes.'

Light Freights.

A volume of stories by Mr. Jacobs uniform in character and appearance with 'Many Cargoes.'

By A. E. W. MASON, Author of 'The Courtship of Morrice Buckler,' 'Miranda of the Balcony,' &c.

Clementina. Illustrated.

A spirited romance of the Jacobites somewhat after the manner of 'Morrice Buckler.' The Old Pretender is introduced as one of the chief characters.

By EDEN PHILLPOTTS, Author of 'Children of the Mist,' 'Sons of the Morning,' &c.

The Striking Hours.

The annals of a Devon village, containing much matter of humorous and pathetic interest.

By EDEN PHILLPOTTS, Author of 'Children of the Mist.'

Fancy Free. Illustrated.

By GWENDOLINE KEATS (Zack), Author of 'Life is Life.'

Tales of Dunstable Weir.

A volume of stories after the style of 'Zack's' well-known first book 'Life is Life.'

By THE HON. EMILY LAWLESS.

With Essex in Ireland. Cheaper Edition.

A cheaper edition of a book which won considerable popularity in a more expensive form some years ago.

By MRS. B. M. CROKER.

A Long Indian Novel.

By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of 'Flames,' 'Tongues of Conscience,' &c.

The Prophet of Berkeley Square. A new long novel.

By F. F. MONTRESOR, Author of 'Into the Highways and Hedges,' 'The Alien.'

By W. E. NORRIS.

The Credit of the County.

By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of 'Mehalah.'

Royal Georgie.

By WALTER RAYMOND, Author of 'Love and Quiet Life.'

Fortune's Darling.

By DOROTHEA GERARD, Author of 'Lady Baby.'

The Million.

By STEPHEN CRANE, Author of 'The Red Badge of Courage.'

The O'Ruddy.

By JANE BARLOW, Author of 'Irish Idylls.'

A Volume of Irish Stories.

By GRACE RHYS.

The Wooing of Sheila.

By TOM GALLON, Author of 'Kiddy.'

Rickerby's Folly.

By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of 'The Story of a Penitent Soul.'

The Master of Beechwood.

By LORD ERNEST HAMILTON.

Mary Hamilton.

By RICHARD MARSH, Author of 'The Seen and the Unseen.'

Both Sides of the Veil.

By GEORGE BERTRAM, Author of 'The People of Clopton.'

The Thirteen Evenings.

By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON.

The Skirts of Happy Chance. Illustrated.

By E. H. COOPER, Author of 'Mr. Blake of Newmarket.'

A New Novel.

This book, like most of Mr. Cooper's novels, is chiefly concerned with sport and racing.

By J. BLOUNDELLE BURTON, Author of 'The Clash of Arms.'

The Year One: a Chapter of the Revolution.

A vivid story of the Reign of Terror in France in 1792, when the year 1 of the Republic commenced.

By ADA CAMBRIDGE, Author of 'Path and Goal.'

The Devastators.

By WEATHERBY CHESNEY.

John Topp, Pirate. Illustrated.

purely intellectual type—a man without soul or great emotional instincts, who solves life's puzzles as the calmly reasoning mathematician would an intricate problem. He is ambitious, but with pitiless criticism of his own powers he feels painfully conscious that he has not accomplished anything of unusual merit, and it is this sense of failure that drives him from Melbourne on a solitary tramp along the west coast. Here he meets a girl and her brother, the occupants of a lonely cottage on the bank of a turbulent river. The boy, it seems, has committed forgery, and, utterly downcast and ashamed, has sought refuge after the expiration of his sentence in this forest solitude, to which his devoted sister has accompanied him. Grey, in his cold intellectuality, is full of scorn for the weakness of such a character. He himself would resolutely determine to face the situation. But the younger man subsequently shows that he possesses what Grey would sacrifice years of his life to have, true genius. In the manuscript, with which he entrusts the visitor on his departure, there are ample evidences of this, and Grey is on his way back to the cottage to assure him of his brilliant gifts when he is led to believe from the discovery of articles of dress that the poor lad, overcome by despair, has drowned himself. Grey marries the sister, and then publishes her brother's work as his own, by this means obtaining a reputation far exceeding anything he could on his own merits have achieved. He and his wife live a cold, restrained existence, each misunderstanding the other—the secret of the manuscript lies between them. Ultimately, of course, matters are cleared up, but not before both have passed through a period of severe trial. The story is one of great interest, and we are not surprised to find that a second edition has been called for.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Romantic Essex: Pedestrian Impressions,' by Reginald A. Beckett, illustrated. We wonder how many people have a genuine liking for country exploration—enough interest, that is to say, to plan out a route of investigation for themselves and enough energy to tramp the lanes and roadways alone. Cyclists we leave out of the question, for we still think the majority are taken up too much with the occupation of pace-making ever to be ardently enamoured of country scenes and sights. To Mr. Beckett it seems well-nigh inconceivable that beautiful Essex, which may be said to lie at the Londoner's very doorway, should be so lamentably neglected. Certainly he makes out a very strong case for the county, and the reader who, after exhausting this pleasantly written volume, feels no disposition to shoulder his knapsack and foot it must be town-trammelled indeed. Mr. Beckett, after some excellent remarks, and not a little useful advice on 'The Art of Walking,' takes us to Saffron Walden, Colchester, Saint Osyth, Earl's Colne, Mersea Island, Maldon, Thaxted, Pleshey, Foulness, Maplin Sand, Epping, and villages innumerable. The impression left on the mind is of delightful footpaths and quiet green lanes. Our author is also a close observer of churches, and without his interest in the historical associations of the various objects he sees we doubt whether a solitary ramble would be found quite so entertaining. A man who would thoroughly enjoy a tramp in the country must possess something of the gipsy temperament, be fond of studying and associating with odd types of his fellow-beings, have a keen appreciation of the beauties of scenery, and, above everything, have a cultivated interest in his surroundings. Without this, as Mr. Beckett points out, even Dame Nature will grow monotonous company at times.

From the same.—'The Natural History of 'Selborne,' by Gilbert White. 'Better late than never' will be the opinion of most people, and indeed it seems strange that so appropriate a work as White's 'Selborne' should not have been issued in the dainty, well-printed 'Temple Classics' before this. Of the book itself there is nothing of course to be said, but we may at least pay a well-merited compliment to the manner of its present production. The printing is if anything even better than that of previous volumes in the series, and the illustrations, considering the thin paper upon which they are printed, come out remarkably well.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'A Race-course Tragedy,' by Nat Gould. There is no lack of incident in this story of an old manor and manor house called Briardale, near Cromer, and of the Rockingham family to whom the estate belonged. The Rockinghams were regarded as a peculiar race. 'One Geoffrey Rockingham has done dark deeds in Briardale Manor, and the spirit of the wife he has gradually driven into an early grave by his cruelty haunted the old house still. In accordance with the usual practice of these ghosts, the weird lady of Briardale always made her appearance before a death occurred in the family.' With such a beginning the reader's mind is safeguarded against unexpected shocks of which many are in store. The Rockinghams, with all their faults, were a brave and restless race; and, perhaps as a consequence thereof, were fond of that fascinating sport, Racing. On the other hand their colours were black, and 'Geoffrey Rockingham went so far as to have a skull and crossbones on the back of the black jacket, but his descendants discarded it.' When the story opens, Archie Rockingham, the young heir to the estates, is eleven years old. He had lost his father a year before from a gunshot wound in the head, the result, as was supposed, of an accident when out shooting alone. He left a widow, still young, and one only brother, Miles Rockingham, who is young Archie's guardian. There is not much love between uncle and nephew; nor, for that matter, between Miles and his sister; but in the latter case it is simulated, and, aided by the influence of a strong mind over a weak one, the guardian induces his ward's mother to marry him. This marriage leads to the Race-course tragedy, and more. The tragic element is, however, somewhat relieved by racing incidents at Newmarket, which are told with all the author's accustomed verve, and the reader, having once got through the first chapter, is not likely to put down the book until he has read to the end.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Boxing,' by Captain W. Edgeworth-Johnstone, Assistant Inspector of Gymnasias. The author of this very interesting and at the same time thoroughly practical manual of boxing was well qualified to write on the noble art of self-defence; for he has had the advantage of learning boxing from that marvellous all-round athlete, Professor Tom Burrows, of Australia, and was heavyweight champion of England in 1895 and 1896. His object in bringing this book before the public is 'the hope that it may lead to our amateurs adopting a more practical form of boxing, and also that some of our professionals may study more closely American methods of training and fighting.' If it be possible to influence the pugilistic world by books, certainly one so cleverly written and so well illustrated as that of Captain Edgeworth-Johnstone cannot fail of achieving the desired result. The illustrations from specially taken photographs include portraits of several professionals, From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—'A History of the Church in Scotland from the Earliest Times down to the Present Day,' by John Macpherson, M.A. The object with which the author set out in this volume is truly a laborious one, and it is matter for sincere congratulation that he should have come through his task with such unquestionable success. Within comparatively small compass, he has given us a well-written, concise, and thoroughly instructive history, commencing with the days of St. Ninian and the Celtic Church and closing with the end of the nineteenth century. The chapters which will naturally attract most attention are those relating to Knox and the Reformation and the Covenanters. Knox's attitude towards Queen Mary is excellently brought out, and we notice that Mr. Macpherson writes of her complicity in the murder of Darnley as now practically made certain owing to the evidence of the Casket Letters, the 'genuineness of which can no longer be doubted.' The Covenanters form the subject-matter of an extremely interesting section, the scales of justice being held fairly evenly. A commendable feature in Mr. Macpherson's work is that at the commencement of each chapter he gives a full list of his authorities. There is also a capital index.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Village Life and Feeling: Songs and Poems,' by Rupert Upperton. There is a joyous strain about Mr. Upperton's verse that will carry a corresponding feeling into the minds of his readers. A humorous touch also happily emphasises many of his efforts, and will tend to promote further cordial relationship. Mr. Upperton expresses his poetic sentiments in a frank, unembarrassed manner that is peculiarly attractive:

A hair upon our parson's head,
Was growing grey, the greyness spread,
Until at last it was such a sight,
The hairs on all the head was white!

Apparently the weight of years lies lightly on Mr. Upperton's soul, and the contagious infection of his buoyant spirit is likely to be gratefully appreciated by his readers.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Under-studies: Short Stories,' by Mary E. Wilkins. Very delicate and fanciful are these little tales, with a subdued humour that adds greatly to their pathos. The authoress must have studied animals (these principally forming the subject of her plot) very closely, and have a deep sympathy with domestic pets. The description of a half-famished cat, foraging on the mountain side for her supper afterwards carrying her prey home to be shared by a stranger who has usurped her master's place, is beautifully given, while the attachment between a small monkey and a boy, who, in the eyes of the animal's owner, are singularly like each other, is equally well depicted. For this attachment the worthy Bird Fancier accounts in a quaint, philosophical fashion. According to his reasoning, there are people 'just sort of no account and little,' who, on dying, are not bad enough for hell or great enough for heaven, but yet have to be got somewhere. 'Well, souls that don't go straight to heaven or hell have got to go again into bodies; there ain't any keeping of them apart; might as well try to keep the little things that go to make up air apart; into bodies those little souls have got to go, but they've got so much smaller through living no-account lives that they won't fit human bodies, so into the cats, and the birds, and the monkeys, and all the rest they go.' The boy and the monkey, in his view, therefore, are kindred souls. Miss Wilkins, in this volume, is seen in a very different aspect from her customary New England stories, but it is one that well suits her. The stories are artistically and plentifully illustrated.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Voysey,' by R. O. Prowse. We have laid this novel aside with very mingled feelings. Clever it undeniably is, though a trifle too analytical, dealing in subtleties of thought and expression which are apt after a time to grow oppressive; it is even reminiscent occasionally of the style of Henry James. But the pervading influence of the book is its subject. It is frankly the story of an illicit passion told with unsparring realism and quite painful-elaboration of detail. And what a sordid, pitiful narrative it is, how indescribably degrading to both the characters concerned! When Voysey first meets Emily Detmont at the house of the Harringtons we at once perceive, thanks to the skill of the author, what will occur—the nature of the woman, her dissatisfaction with her husband, the inner workings of an ill-regulated mind, are all admirably suggested, while Voysey on his part is shown to be attracted by her individuality and physical charm. Soon a perfect understanding is established between them. Then follows the usual course of events; greater and greater licence, less and less resistance on Voysey's part to the ignoble rôle he is called upon to perform towards the unsuspecting husband, the final struggle and complete fall. Afterwards the most ghastly scene of all comes about. The lovers, unsatisfied with their present opportunities, are about to elope, when the husband is suddenly taken ill. An operation is decided upon, and the guilty couple stand listening in a room below to the movements of the doctors overhead. All this is enlarged upon with almost brutal intensity. The husband dies, but the lovers do not marry. Perhaps there is a moral in this, though poetic justice would best have been served by their unhappy union. The story is exceedingly powerful, if disagreeable in its choice of subject. Still, an author must use the weapons that lie nearest to his hand. There are many people who have an inordinate admiration for this class of fiction.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Men and Letters,' by Herbert Paul. The majority of these essays appeared in the Nineteenth Century, and this in itself is ample testimony of their interest and critical value. It would be pleasant had we the space to enlarge upon the many and thoughtful aspects of Mr. Paul's reasoning. 'The Decay of Classical Quotation,' 'The Victorian Novel,' and 'The Art of Letter-writing,' only to mention three of his subjects, offer for instance terrible temptations to be expansive. But the huge pile of volumes now lying on our table confronts us with a difficulty that is too tangible to be readily disregarded. All we can say, therefore, is that Mr. Paul's criticisms, by reason of their insight and wide knowledge, are exceedingly interesting; that they yet afford the literary student frequent opportunities of dissent, without which all critical writing would lose its savour; and that the reader of studious thoughtful temperament with a leaning towards the world of letters, will miss a great treat if he fails to 'beg, borrow, or steal,' this volume. Of course it would be still better if he were to buy it.

From Mr. John Long.—'Plato's Handmaiden,' by Lucas Cleeve. We are becoming a little weary of the foolish imaginative wife whose morbid cravings elicit so much sympathy from present-day novelists to the detriment of the good-hearted, if commonplace husband, and on first opening Lucas Cleeve's new book we thought we were condemned to another story constructed according to the prevailing fashion. But further investigation showed us that this was not so. The sympathy of the narrative, however, entirely lies on the wife's side. She is one of those simple tender-hearted little women who apparently can never be brought to believe that their so-called friends may prove treacherous. Over and over again she is confronted with proofs as palpable as daylight, and yet eagerly takes refuge in a strained excuse. Her greatest enemy is her sister-in-law, a woman of a jealous, spiteful and thoroughly unscrupulous nature. The author has scarcely penetrated to the depths of this character. She savours too much of a melodramatic creation, and the persistency with which her 'dilated nostrils,' heaving breast, and nail-biting propensities are referred to becomes wearisome. The foolish heroine in her desire for excitement starts a millinery establishment in Bond Street, and borrows a thousand pounds from an unprincipled brother for the purpose. From this all the trouble of the story arises, for right down to the last chapter Georgie Elliot is struggling to relieve herself from her embarrassments. Her husband, so far from being of any assistance to her, is a stern judge. His character is not very consistently drawn, a remark that applies to other personages in the story. The reader, inspired with sympathy for the troubled wife, will be sorry to find at its conclusion that the wicked Amelia is allowed to go practically unpunished; but such is the way of the world.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'The Grenada Handbook, Directory and Almanac for the Year 1901-1902,' compiled by the Colonial Secretary. This is a capital little publication in every sense of the word, well arranged, concisely written, and thoroughly useful in its information. Everything in regard to the financial position of the island, its chief towns, agriculture, population, primary and secondary schools, legislative bodies, import duties, fees, parochial rates and dues, fauna, birds, trees, shrubs, &c., may be learnt from these pages. The work has now reached its sixth year of issue, and it is intimated that in future it will be published as nearly as possible on the 31st of March in each year, that date having been, under a recent arrangement, fixed as the close of the colony's financial year. The Handbook, however, is not in any way a Government publication.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'In Bad Company, and other Stories,' by Rolf Boldrewood. 'In Bad Company' is the longest of the stories in this volume, but it is certainly not the most attractive. Of course everything that the author puts his hand to bears the impress of a vigorous, independent nature, free from the trammels that beset the dwellers in large towns, but the choice of subject has much to do with the interest of a story. The main feature of 'In Bad Company' is that in depicting the life of an honest, outspoken shearer on an inland station in Australia it throws light on the labour troubles which have agitated the colony; but its construction is inartistic and the treatment has none of that racy imaginative colouring which one has been led to expect from the author of 'Robbery Under Arms.' Far more absorbing are some of the shorter tales, especially those dealing with the incidents of a bushranger's life, which in Mr. Boldrewood's hands possess a realistic descriptive force that holds the reader spell-bound. The contents of the volume, however, are exceedingly varied, and several of them present the author in quite a personal atmosphere. He seems, if we may judge from his papers on 'Dear Dermot' and 'The Horse you don't see now,' to have been singularly fortunate in his possession of equine treasures. We should also mention that the volume contains some interesting autobiographical sketches illustrating life and customs in Sydney when Mr. Boldrewood was a boy.

From the same.—'The Confessions of an English Opium Eater, and other Essays,' by Thomas De Quincey. No work could be more suitable to the 'Library of English Classics' than this, and in the matter of its production it vies with the illustrious volumes of the series that have preceded it. The essays which accompany the famous 'Confessions of an English Opium Eater' are 'The Daughter of Lebanon,' 'On Murder considered as one of the Fine Arts,' 'Supplementary Paper' to same, 'The Spanish Military Nun,' and 'The English Mail Coach.' In each instance the latest and revised version is followed—i.e. that printed in the first collected edition of De Quincey's works, the issue of which was begun in 1853. Of course in the case of the 'Confessions' it will always be a moot point with some critics whether the first or second (so greatly expanded) version is the more important and interesting, but the reasons that have induced Mr. A. W. Pollard, the present editor, to select the more recent text are beyond question. The volume supplies the ordinary reader with a splendid opportunity of adding a masterpiece of English literature to his library, well printed and bound, at a moderate outlay.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Belinda Fitzwarren,' by the Earl of Iddesleigh. The old game of cross-purposes is very effectively utilised in this novel. A murder is committed, and the heroine believes from certain evidence known only to herself that the hero is the perpetrator, while the hero on the other hand is under the impression that the heroine is the guilty party. At least we should say that at first they believe this, for being lovers they are naturally not able to entertain such wicked opinions of each other for long. However, the misconception lasts long enough for the hero to give himself up as the murderer, thinking thereby to save the heroine; and it then becomes her duty to clear up the mystery and release her lover from gaol. This she does in the most courageous fashion, and the story ends on the eve of their marriage. The distinguishing features of the novel are a bright, luminous style; some excellent sketches of character, revealed in a few decisive strokes; and a certain capability of construction. The author, we are sure, will improve on his work with further experience, but, as it is, he has written a story much above the average of present-day fiction, and that takes possession of the reader's interest from the opening chapters.

From the same.—'Lavengro, the Scholar, the Gypsy, the Priest,' by George Borrow, with notes and an introduction by F. Hinds Groome, in two volumes, with a portrait from a painting by H. W. Phillips. Here is another edition of Borrow's 'Lavengro,' got up in the new style, printed on thin paper, small 8vo., forming two new volumes of the 'Little Library' series. The leaves are uncut, which may possibly add to its gracefulness, but it must be said that it presents very great inconvenience to the reader; for, easy as it may be to cut up leaves of a book of ordinary paper, it is really tantalising to get the paper-knife between these very thin leaves. That is the only fault we can possibly find with these very pretty volumes. 'Lavengro' was first published in 1850, and is now out of copyright. It is a curious fact that when this work was first published by Mr. Murray it met with a very sorry reception, and it is only since the author's death in 1881 (says the editor) 'that it has won its due place of pre-eminence. It was not genteel enough for the readers of Disraeli and Bulwer Lytton.' Since the copyright expired there have been several editions published.

From the same.—'Dodo,' the well-known and popular story by Mr. E. F. Benson, has now been issued in 'The Novelist' series, and we may be sure will be heartily welcomed by subscribers to this well selected and capably printed collection of copyright novels.

From Mr. John Milne.—'A Common-sense Army,' by the Author of 'An Absent-minded War.' The writer of this volume again raises his voice against the extraordinary ignorance and apathy displayed by the vast majority of Englishmen on a subject of such vital importance as the defences of the Empire. To him it seems absurd to argue that no scheme of Army Reform would be complete which does not provide for enlarging the militia and improving the efficiency of the volunteers. Such auxiliary forces, he points out, are not and never will be available, en bloc, for service outside the United Kingdom, and experience has shown that imperfectly trained, indifferently equipped, and physically weak men are quite unfitted to take the field against European troops, such as would be found in an invading army. On the other hand, the author has a scheme of his own to propose. It would unfortunately necessitate an extra expenditure of some seven or eight millions a year, but this, considering the interests imperilled, would surely be looked upon as a trifle. What the scheme is, those interested in the subject of army reform may be referred to the book to find out. Though we may frequently disagree with the author's contentions, none can dispute that he argues his case with excellent clearness and vigour.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.—'David Livingstone,' by T. Banks MacLachlan. No doubt, as the author points out, the achievements of the great missionary-traveller are in danger of being forgotten by the present generation, and the latest addition to the 'Famous Scots' Series will therefore serve a useful purpose in reviving his memory. The book, moreover, derives additional interest from recent events in South Africa. Mr. MacLachlan supplies a brightly written and picturesque account of the chief events in Livingstone's life, and has ably condensed a valuable amount of material into small compass.]

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Joseph Parker, D.D., his Life and Ministry,' by Albert Dawson. In an age when biographies are so numerous one might be pardoned for asking why are accounts of prominent personages published during their lifetime, rather than when their demise permits a post-mortem examination of claims for public recognition. To such an objection, however, the answer may well be given that to read about the work of a man who is still with us is surely better than to take little or no interest in him or his work while living, but to wait until he is dead and then advertise one's own self by subscribing to some memorial of him. Mr. Albert Dawson, the author of this capital addition to the 'New Century Leaders' series, was formerly secretary to Dr. Parker, and therefore had every opportunity for adequately performing the task entrusted to him by the publishers. The result is a very readable and improving book; for Dr. Parker teaches by his life as much as by any sermon. No reader, whether prejudiced or impartial, can fail to be struck by the industry, perseverance, and integrity of the subject of this memoir. As instances of these qualities may be noted his teaching himself shorthand, assuredly no easy task; his perseverance in open-air readings and declamations, to fit himself for preaching to large congregations; and his integrity as shown in refusing the call to the Cavendish Street Chapel at Manchester until an outstanding debt on the Congregational Church at Banbury had been liquidated; and his admirable demeanour at Manchester when invited to the Poultry Chapel, in London. To those who take pleasure in reading of good and useful lives this volume may be confidently recommended.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'Cinders,' by Helen Mathers. It is long since we knew Miss Mathers to be so brilliantly 'smart' as in this novel. She seems, if we may say so, to have renewed her youth—to have recovered all her old vivacity, epigrammatic incisiveness and charming diablerie. Faults there are in her book undoubtedly—the sensational episode of Cinders's visit to Seven Dials at the instigation of the unscrupulous dissipated George Arundel, for instance, is anything but well managed—but these are more than counter-balanced by the humour and audacity of the writing. The story is particularly happy in its portraits of women; the men are scarcely so good, though by no means without attraction. Celia Schilizzi, whose face, person, and dress are fashioned in one delicious harmony of beauty, but who is entirely without intellect save such incipient workings as are required for the pursuit of her own selfish pleasures; Lucilla Beaulerck, well-bred and outspoken, with the air of a fool and the brains of a very clever woman; and loyal, enthusiastic, warm hearted Cinders, whose fate it is to rescue Lucilla from a great danger and to fall into one herself—all these are capably depicted without being in any way overdrawn. Cinders—whose actual name is Cynthia—is a most bewitching character whose sympathy with the soldiers out in South Africa and pride in their glorious deeds is one of the prettiest things in the book.

From Mr. G. M. Renouf, St. Catherine Street, Montreal.—'The Prose Writers of Canada.' This pamphlet is a reprint of an interesting and suggestive address by Mr. S. E. Dawson which was prepared for the American Library Association and delivered on June 11, 1900, at Montreal, where the meeting for that year was held. It was afterwards read, with a few additions, on December 7, 1900, in a winter course of lectures to the teachers of the City and District of Montreal. The fact that it was written originally for the librarians of America will account for the line of thought running through the address; because, outside of a few great institutions, few Canadian books are found in the libraries of the United States. It was intended to be an indication of the directions in which they were to look in order to follow up a neglected department of literature.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Songs of the Sword and the Soldier,' collected and edited by Alexander Eagar. Among the authors whose poems have been included in this thoroughly inspiring volume are Shakespeare, Scott, Tennyson, Spenser, Dryden, Burns, Longfellow, Campbell, Moore, Kingsley, Cowper, Gray, and Mrs. Hemans. A number of present-day poets are also represented. Mr. Eagar has carried out his work with commendable skill and discrimination, and may be congratulated on having produced a very interesting volume.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Pacifico,' by John Randal. Great events from little causes often spring, but the hero of Mr. Randal's stirring story could scarcely have anticipated what perilous adventures would result from his landing on the Island of Santa Celestina as the emissary of his company-promoting friend, Geoff. Lockhart. Quite an inventive genius is Geoff. He happens to read in a medical paper that the demand for sulphur has become unprecedented in consequence of its use in a new form of bathing treatment by one Dr. Miniati, and immediately he plots to convert the vineyard of Feliciolo in the island, which is strongly impregnated with the desired mineral (as the wine made from the grapes cultivated on the hill-side only too unpleasantly shows) into a veritable gold mine. But there is some difficulty about his obtaining a concession, and so he persuades his friend, John Charlton, who for various reasons is obliged to leave England, to go out to Santa Celestina and engineer matters on his behalf. Then follow a lively series of events, for the internal affairs of the island are simply honeycombed with intrigue and factional jealousies, and these Italians are fearful fellows for conceiving a dislike that can only be satisfied by the employment of the dagger. The chief excitement of the story arises from Charlton's capture by brigands, and his hair-breadth escapes, in company with Geoff. Lockhart, the necessary girl, and her father, from death. His adventures are certainly of a very remarkable and rousing description, calculated to engross the undivided attention of the reader, but, though sensational, they never completely outrage the claims of probability. 'Pacifico,' in short, is a capital story of lively incident, vigorously told, and unflagging in its dramatic interest to the last.

From the Smith Premier Typewriter Co.—'Souvenir of the Siege of Mafeking.' 'I dislike all these childish rejoicings for peace,' wrote Lord Nelson to his friend, Colonel Stewart, October 10, 1801, after learning that the preliminaries of the Peace (of Amiens) had been signed in London on October 2 amid great rejoicings. What would he have thought of the 'rejoicings' at the relief of Mafeking on 'Mafficking' night? Mr. Hands, in his introduction to this interesting souvenir, says with truth: 'Everyone knows how the plucky and cheerful news from Mafeking kept heart in the people at home during the dark days of the winter of 1899.' And yet he has to add: 'When I came home I observed a disposition on the part of many people to underrate the achievements of Mafeking. It was, I imagine, a sort of reaction after the wild excesses of Mafficking.' Certainly the scenes in London streets on that night, when the metropolis of this great empire was, as it were, handed over to the tender mercies of roughs or hooligans, were calculated to disgust the most patriotic citizens. To such persons we would recommend as a palliative this record, wherein they will find, not only the interesting, instructive, and amusing general orders of the brave commanding Colonel (now General) Baden-Powell, but also the cheering messages sent to him by our late good and gracious Queen Victoria. We are glad to learn that the Smith Premier Typewriter, which rendered such yeoman service to the besieged, after having had its case perforated by Mauser bullets and its back gear blown to pieces by the Long Tom shell which struck the headquarters' office, was enabled to resume operations, thanks to the skill of Gunsmith O. Fordish.

From Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. Limited.—'Church Quarterly Review.' We know of no magazine that more steadily maintains its high character than the Church Quarterly. Always thoughtful, well balanced, and unswerving in its allegiance to the best interests of the Church, it sets an example that the conductors of other religious organs might well follow. In the April issue there are several papers of extreme interest. The opening article on 'Queen Victoria,' based on the works of Sir Herbert Maxwell, Sir Theodore Martin, Sir T. Erskine May, Mr. G. G. Perry, and writers in the daily papers, supplies an admirable estimate of the life and character of our late beloved sovereign. Lengthy and penetrating reviews appear under the titles of 'Dr. Bright and Church History,' 'China of To-day,' 'Canon Gore on the Eucharist,' 'The Episcopate of Bishop Creighton,' 'Priesthood and Sacrifice,' 'Susan Ferrier's Life and Correspondence,' 'A Practical Aspect of the Papacy,' and 'Dr. Moberly on the Atonement,' while the number, as usual, is brought to a conclusion with a quantity of short but none the less interesting book notices. From first page to last it exhibits signs of an experienced controlling hand, exercised with wise discrimination and tact.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Black Mary,' by Allan M'Aulay. It could hardly have been an agreeable surprise for the rigid Hepburns of Ardwinnock, who were so firm in their religious principles and so narrow-minded in their sympathies, when little Mary, alleged to be the natural daughter by a brown mother of their deceased brother Anthony in Jamaica, was delivered, according to directions, at the family place in Scotland. And yet 'Black Mary' came to be the joy and pride of old James Hepburn's heart, and even Aunt Barbara and the serving maid, Rachel, were in time wooed over to take a more tolerant view of her. But then the crash came. Mary was not the daughter of Anthony, but of one Cabel Dickenson, a planter in Jamaica, who had perpetrated a cruel fraud on the Ardwinnock family. Now he claimed his daughter. Unable to resist her hard fate, she returned to Jamaica with her father, and was at his death-bed, ten years later, when he died from the effects of hard drinking. Other events follow which will absorb the reader's attention. The story treats of the more homely aspects of life, especially as seen in Scotland, and is narrated with quiet force and considerable skill in the delineation of character.

From Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Limited.—The Art Journal for May presents its readers with a very effective frontispiece in the shape of an etching by Hugo Struck, from a painting by Claus Meyer, entitled 'A Game at Cards.' The articles of the number—all of which are illustrated—seem to be more than usually varied and interesting. Mr. Alexander McGibbon writes of 'The Glasgow International Exhibition, 1901'; Mr. Frank Rinder contributes an appreciative paper on 'The Art of Ernest Normand'; Mr. Herbert A. Bone discusses 'The Frieze and its Origin'; while Mr. Lewis F. Day has something to say on the subject of 'Modern Stencilling.' These with other articles, notes on passing events, gossip from the sale room, &c., make up an extremely attractive issue.

From Verlag der Wagner'schen Universitäts-Buchhandlung, Innsbruck.—'Das Jagdbuch Kaiser Maximilians I.' In Verbindung mit Wm. A. Baillie-Grohman, herausgegeben von Dr. Michael Mayr, Archiv-Direktor der k.k. Statthalterei und a.o. Universitäts-Professor in Innsbruck. This magnificent reprint of the Emperor Maximilian's hunting book has the advantage of the co-operation in the editorship of so competent an authority on sport as Mr. Wm. A. Baillie-Grohman, and also of a valuable comparison between the chamois-hunting of the present day and that of his youth written by Count Wilczek, at Mr. Baillie-Grohman's special request. Mr. Baillie-Grohman tells us, in his interesting preface, how very rare are old books or manuscripts on sport containing explanatory pictures, without which it is often difficult to understand the text. It was Kaiser Maximilian the First who opened a new era in sporting literature by two books on hunting and fishing, and it is the fine reproductions in colours of the original and very quaint illustrations which give the books their chief value. Mr. Baillie-Grohman relates how he came to find the original of this hunting book. He was engaged in editing 'The Mayster of Game,' the oldest manuscript on hunting in the English language, when he came upon the original of the 'Jagdbuch' in the MSS. department of the Royal Library, Brussels, and perceived that a manuscript which had passed through his hands twenty-five years before in the Innsbruck Statthalterei Archives, and was considered to be the original, was in reality a copy wanting the pictures. He was allowed to photograph the pictures in the original, and afterwards to have the entire manuscript copied in the Dresden Royal State Archives. Finally, the Brussels original was lent to the Innsbruck Archives, where an accurate comparison of it was made with the manuscript there, and the pictures were faithfully copied at the lithographic establishment of J. Redlich, Innsbruck, and the book printed from type expressly cut by the publisher for the purpose. It is a remarkable and gratifying fact that this book, which originated in Innsbruck four hundred years ago, should now be reprinted and published there in all the splendour of colour-printing, clear-cut Gothic type, brilliant ink, beautiful paper, and handsome binding, all which it owes to the able publisher and worthy representative of a publishing firm which has carried on business in uninterrupted succession since the sixteenth century. We may add that the illustrations comprise three coloured reproductions of contemporary paintings and three heliogravure plates.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Life History of Dinah Kellow,' by Christopher Hare. There are altogether some ten stories in this volume, and the first and longest supplies the title for the work. The history of Dinah Kellow is very pathetic in its many and varied aspects. First we have the tiny ruddy-faced little girl, a picture of health and childish merriment, as she skips about the green fields accompanied by her aged uncle; then the wretched household drudge, starved and ill-treated, anxious to bestow the great wealth of love that lies in her breast, but repelled and insulted. Anon, better days dawn, and then come the first faint promptings of passion; marriage follows, with all its trials and family cares, so affectionately borne; finally, misfortune and death. We believe there are but few readers who will be unaffected by the story of Dinah Kellow's life, and the country simplicity which impregnates it to the very core adds materially to its emotional effect; the dialect also possesses a charm. The other stories are of similar kind, though scarcely so emotional, and in one or two instances they rise to the distinction of humour. But it is in his more sombre colouring that the author chiefly excels, and thoughts of poor Dinah are likely to remain with the reader long after the story has been laid on one side.

From the same.—'Wise Men and a Fool,' by Coulson Kernahan. In a few words of preface the author enters into 'an explanation and an apology' for the title of his work. It certainly seems a little mystifying, though admirably calculated to arouse the public curiosity. It now turns out that the wise men are Robert Louis Stevenson, Robert Browning, Thomas Carlyle, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lord Tennyson, Dr. George MacDonald, Frederick Locker-Lampson, and other intellectual giants at whose feet Mr. Kernahan in the capacity of—the other party—has imbibed wisdom. These essays are very interesting, not only because they bring the reader into the charmed circle of distinguished literary life, but because Mr. Kernahan has managed with great dexterity to convey a vivid impression of the personality of each author. He himself calls his articles 'mere snapshots' and no doubt to some extent this is true, but they possess an attraction for the popular mind that more weighty studies would possibly miss, and in this respect they may well serve a useful purpose in stimulating to more extended reading. Of the majority of the 'wise men' portraits are given, and the entire volume, as we have said, is one of much attraction.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'The Fate of Endilloe,' by Silas K. Hocking, with original illustrations by Lancelot Speed. Those who are acquainted with Mr. Hocking's work will not require to be told of the effective use he can make of simple material, or how, without any apparent effort, he can evolve a thoroughly interesting story from the doings of quite ordinary commonplace people. It is this very homeliness and simplicity of style, we fancy, that secures him his great popularity, for there are many readers of the less imaginative type who like to be reminded of their own daily surroundings rather than carried into a world of emotion and higher fancy of which they have no conception. 'The Fate of Endilloe' will please Mr. Hocking's numerous admirers immensely. It is a story after his usual fashion, naturally told, quick of movement, and replete with homely character. The plot culminates after the good old-fashioned way in a marriage ceremony, and the hero, in replying to the toast of the bride and bridegroom, says: 'I went away to seek my fortune and came home to find it'—one of those enigmatic remarks that are capable of being taken in two ways, for, as a matter of fact, the lucky dog had found a rich estate as well as a wife. But those who had seen his loving look at the bride would of course know quite well what he meant. The rich acres of Endilloe were as nothing to him, and the wealth in the Wheal Patience mine a mere trifle. Mr. Hocking's heroes are nothing if not virtuous.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Mystery of the Clapsed Hands,' by Guy Boothby, with illustrations by A. W. Mills. Godfrey Henderson and Victor Fensden are two young artists and old friends. The former is a promising young painter, but quite unartist-like in appearance, standing fully six feet, having broad and muscular shoulders, a pleasant open countenance, which made one feel its owner was to be trusted, who had rowed stroke in his 'varsity boat and was famed as a good all-round athlete, and yet 'had painted three of the most beautiful pictures—with a touch of poetry in them—that the public had seen for many years.' His friend Fensden is altogether different, being at least three inches shorter, of slight build, nervous and delicate, wears his hair long, has a Vandyke beard and moustache, and is partial to velvet coats and startling ties. 'His pictures were of the Impressionist order—pretty enough in their way, but lacking in form and a trifle vague as to colouring. On occasions he wrote poetry.' Henderson is painting a picture which is to be his magnum opus, but cannot find a suitable female model. Fensden, however, succeeds in discovering the very girl Godfrey wants, and takes his friend to a cheap

Italian restaurant in Soho, where, after partaking of a not too palatable meal, Henderson is rewarded by the entrance of the ideal model and her mother. Fensden makes his friend known to the Signora Cardi and her daughter Teresina, the latter agreeing to attend at Godfrey's studio daily while the picture is being painted. At last it is finished, sent to the Royal Academy, and accepted. Whereupon the artist says to his model, 'It is your face that has done it, Teresina. I knew they would not be able to resist that.' But Fensden takes him to task, asserting that Teresina is madly in love with Godfrey, and suggesting that his friend should 'take hold of himself in time and prevent the girl from being made unhappy.' Godfrey wishes he could afford to go abroad for six months. Then one of those strange things happens which only occur in novels. An old uncle dies leaving Henderson an estate worth fifteen thousand a year; and, as the old gentleman is buried as well as dead before the nephew hears of the sad event, there is nothing to prevent the heir from at once going on the Continent and taking his friend with him. In the course of their travels they visit Egypt, whence Godfrey is summoned home, his mother being seriously ill. He leaves Fensden to go through the rest of the projected tour and returns to England, utilising his brief time at Naples in visiting Teresina and her mother, who have returned to their old home there and to whom he is very generous. Teresina is now evidently in love with Godfrey, who, on reaching home, finds his mother better. He presently becomes engaged to a Miss Molly Devereux, and the marriage day is fixed. But in the interim he meets in London Teresina, whose mother has died in Italy, and that same night the poor girl is stabbed to death. The crime, however, is not discovered immediately, and meanwhile Godfrey invites his friend Fensden to his family seat, Detwiche Hall; and there, while looking at his wedding presents, Godfrey opens an oblong box which is found to contain two small hands, their fingers tightly interlaced, which had been severed from the body to which they had belonged, and which prove to be the hands of the murdered Teresina. How at the inquest suspicion is thrown on Godfrey, how he is tried for murder, and what is the result of the trial will be found related in this very sensational, although not very probable, story, which Mr. Wallace Mills has illustrated by some remarkably clever designs.

NEW EDITIONS.—Mr. David Nutt has issued a fifteenth edition, revised and enlarged, of the first part of 'The Wellington College French Grammar,' by H. W. Eve, M.A., and F. De Baudiss. In this (which treats of Accidence and Minor Syntax), some of the matter which previously occupied a place in the body of the book has been relegated to an appendix, and by this means additional simplicity of teaching has been attained without in any way impairing the volume as a work of reference.—Admirers of Mr. Sheridan Le Fanu's novels will be glad to learn that 'Uncle Silas,' one of the most thrilling and sensational of his many sensational stories, has now been added by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. to their popular Sixpenny Series.—Among new editions published by Messrs. Seeley & Co. are 'The Two Swords, a story of Old Bristol,' by Emma Marshall, which has now reached the thirteenth thousand; 'To the Lions, a Tale of the Early Christians,' by the Rev. Alfred J. Church, M.A. (fifth thousand); and that excellent book for young people, 'The Old Looking-Glass and the Broken Looking-Glass,' by Maria Louisa Charlesworth. All these volumes are suitably illustrated.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND RECENT BOOKS

LATEST ADDITIONS TO MACMILLAN'S COLONIAL LIBRARY OF COPYRIGHT BOOKS

For circulation only in INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

To be had in paper covers and cloth boards.

426. Count Hannibal.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

425. The Firebrand.

By S. R. CROCKETT.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

424. The Helmet of Navarre.

By BERTHA RUNKLE.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE.—'A story of Old France which is the equal of the ablest work of Weyman or Conan Doyle, and which surpasses their best in its portraiture of women.'

422. Cinderella.

By S. R. CROCKETT.

411. The Crisis.

By WINSTON CHURCHILL, Author of 'Richard Carvel' (400th Thousand).

423. In Bad Company.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

421. The Silver Skull.

By S. R. CROCKETT.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

420. In the Ranks of the C.I.V.

By DRIVER ERSKINE CHILDERS.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—'It began to quote from this unpretentiously vivid, brightly written, and in every way admirable record, we should never stop. As a description of life on campaign it could scarcely be bettered.'

419. Number One and Number Two.

By FRANCES M. PEARD.

THE OUTLOOK.—'A comedy of a wilful young woman, excellently told.'

418. Old New Zealand.

Preface by the EARL OF PEMBROKE.

417. The Attaché at Peking.

By A. B. FREEMAN-MITFORD, C.B.

GLOBE.—'A book which will rank with the best of our literature concerning China, for it is at once informing and entertaining, and the work of an expert to boot.'

415. Eleanor.

By MRS. HUMPHRY WARD. 160th Thousand.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

LITERATURE.—'Seems to us her most masterly and most mature production. . . . The story moves throughout in a high range of emotion, never out of touch with ideas, never commonplace. Sorrowful though it be, it is not depressing or pessimistic, and in the dignified pathos of its end the highly wrought sympathies of the reader sink naturally to repose.'

408. Foes in Law.

By RHODA BROUGHTON. 7th Thousand.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—'Her skill to write a love story which holds the reader's attention from Chapter I. to "Finis" remains unimpaired.'

407. In the Palace of the King.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD. 118th Thousand.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

SPECTATOR.—'A truly thrilling tale. . . . The passage of the devoted lovers from one peril to another keeps the reader agreeably engrossed from first to last.'

406. Richard Yea-and-Nay.

By MAURICE HEWLETT. 55th Thousand.

(Not supplied to Canada.)

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—'The story carries us along as though throughout we were galloping on strong horses. There is a rush and fervour about it all which sweeps us off our feet till the end is reached and the tale is done. It is very clever, very spirited.'

Second Impression now ready.

'To our thanks to Mr. Pollard we may add our thanks to Messrs. Macmillan, not merely for this volume, but for the whole series of which it forms a part. Nothing better has ever been done in the way of cheap reprints. We get in these volumes, at a very moderate price, books which for print, paper, and general get-up are worthy to stand on the shelves of any library. We wish the series all success. It is a real boon to the scholar of small means who loves a sound book, but cannot afford high prices.'—SPECTATOR.

NOTE

SINCE the death of the late Mr. George Murray Smith, who was a few months my senior, I am told that I am the oldest London publisher. To be called the doyen of the trade is of that kind of distinction which one can accept without pride, and adopt without vanity. It is a distinction to which everyone is heir who only lives long enough, and it is presumably one which no one specially envies or covets, seeing that '... barring all pother 'twixt one and the other,

We shall all be kings in our turn.'

An intercourse of sixty years and more with Books and Booksellers, Authors and Publishers, gives me almost the title to think that I am in my own person a kind of link between the Publishers of to-day and the Booksellers of the eighteenth century of whom I have endeavoured to give some glimpses. My late partner, Sampson Low, was a youth of twenty when my last two subjects, William Hutton and James Lackington, died in 1815; and I was born not many years afterwards; this perhaps may serve as an excuse for writing the following SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS which have recently appeared in the Publishers' Circular. The original idea was to condense into a readable sketch the main features of the 'Lives' treated of. In bringing them together into a volume I have tried to make them a little more complete by adding matter here and there, which for want of space did not appear in the serial issue. I have gathered the material from various sources, chiefly from the autobiographies of those who have written an account of their own lives; for the rest I am indebted to the industry of Mr. Charles Knight, Mr. W. Roberts, 'The Dictionary of National Biography,' and to a curious book entitled 'Fifty Years' Recollections of an Old Bookseller.' I have also found material in Nichols' 'Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century' (nine volumes), in Southey's 'The Doctor,' and in other works. I am also indebted to Mr. W. H. Peet for the loan of several books pertaining to the subjects.

2 NEW BOOKS for TEACHERS

MODEL AND BLACKBOARD DRAWING

Crown 4to. 3s. 6d. net.

By F. F. LYDON,

Art Master, Parmiter's School; People's Palace School of Art; and Tottenham Training College.

'The author and publishers of this book are to be highly congratulated. . . . No pains have been spared to make the book one of the very best issued on these subjects. The plates are splendid specimens of work, and they show a numerous range of subjects in a variety of ways. The book is full of lucid and clever instruction. It will be a boon to students and teachers. They need not wish for a better thing than this.'—SCHOOLMASTER.

ACTUAL SIZE, 8×6 INCHES.

AMBIDEXTROUS AND FREE-ARM BLACKBOARD DRAWING AND DESIGN

Crown 4to. 5s. net.

By F. F. LYDON.

The SCHOOLMASTER says: 'The more we look into this book the better we like it. . . . The book from first to last is admirably conceived and admirably carried out. . . . It treats of an extension of Freehand Drawing, shows how it can be arranged for, what are the aims of the extension, and, by means of fifty-seven excellent full-page plates, gives ample opportunity for a teacher with an elastic mind to venture on new work which will bring his pupils much profit and himself intense delight.'

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

DICTIONARY

BY

R. J. WILKINSON

(Straits Settlements Civil Service).

THE aim of the Author of this MALAY-ENGLISH DICTIONARY has been the preparation of a work as far as possible accurate and complete within certain definite limits prescribed for it.

No single book can, within reasonable compass, adequately deal with all the Malayan dialects spoken in the Peninsula, in Sumatra, in Java, in the Moluccas, and in Borneo. The present work confines itself to the Malay of literature and to two great dialects: that of Riau and Johor, which is also spoken in Selangor, Pahang, and in Malacca, and that of Kedah, which is the colloquial of Penang and Province Wellesley as well. Incidentally, however, many local peculiarities are recorded, and many words which have crept into the patois of towns such as Singapore and Penang fall naturally within the scope of this work.

Quotations from every department of Malay literature have been used to illustrate the range and meaning of words and expressions. References to the book quoted are given so as to render it easy for the advanced student not only to see for himself how a word is used, but also where it is used, and to judge of its antiquity and of the class of literature in which it is found. Many Malay works have, of course, never been printed; in such cases a reference is given to the name (generally well known) of the work itself, while the original manuscript copies used by the author have been presented to the University Library at Cambridge, where they are available for reference by students. Advantage has been taken of the numerous proverbs and idiomatic sayings in use among natives, and though the Dictionary cannot be said to have exhausted this very interesting department of Malay research it will, it is hoped, be found to have dealt sufficiently with it.

Owing in a great measure to the assistance given to the author by friends of special scientific knowledge, it has been found possible to identify the Malay names of many plants, animals, and shells with the scientific names for the same.

Much care has also been devoted to the department of ethnography, but it would require the preparation of an album of illustrative plates to exactly describe many of the weapons, utensils, arts, and industries of the Malays.

The work will contain besides the Dictionary proper a general introduction on the sources and history of the Malay language; appendices on its orthography and literature, and an index for the use of those to whom the Arabic character is unfamiliar. The preparation of this index and the adoption of a consistent system of Malay spelling should add to the usefulness of a book which is primarily intended to be a work of reference.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE DINNER OF THE ASSOCIATIONS.

For the benefit of our readers generally, and of the thousands of booksellers who were unable to be present at the banquet of the Publishers and Booksellers' Associations on May 10, we give a full report of the affair, and must congratulate Mr. Frederick Macmillan, who presided, as well as all concerned—especially the Dinner Committee, which consisted of Messrs. Joseph W. Darton, Frank Denny, Frank Hanson, Henry W. Keay, F. Macmillan, and Mr. Joseph Shaylor. No one who has not served on such a committee can have any idea of the amount of labour, time, and tact required in arranging for a large affair of this kind.

Of course the net system was the main topic on which the speakers dwelt, and it is interesting to note that, although it cannot be said that there are none who view the net system with disfavour, the great majority of the publishers and booksellers of this country and America anticipate that the greatest benefit will result from its introduction, and that, in the words of Mr. Macmillan, 'a new era has begun, and a better state of things both for booksellers and for book-buyers is in sight—for booksellers the prospect of a fair return for their labour, for book-buyers the prospect of dealing with men whose circumstances enable them to keep adequate stocks from which to make their selections,' and Mr. Macmillan might have added, though the inference is obvious enough, that publishers also must benefit by an improvement in the condition of the retail trade.

In previous numbers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR we have referred to the fact that the retail trade in America is so much in love with the new system that there is a strong outcry for all books to be made net; but we hope that more moderate counsels will prevail. It is much better that the change should be gradual and natural than be forced to the front before experience has shown us how it is going to answer.

In his speech in response to the toast of the Booksellers' Associations, Mr. Keay, the President—and we congratulate the booksellers on having such an excellent president—said 'he was happy to state that the booksellers and the publishers had united together and had formulated a scheme which was being carried out in friendly rivalry by both. Of course there were objectors, but he rejoiced to know that at this time there was not a single case, with one exception (the Cardiff Library), of net books being undersold throughout the whole of Great Britain and Ireland.' Considering, as Mr. Macmillan pointed out, the doubt and distrust which had been expressed when the system was first proposed, such a result as that announced by Mr. Keay is certainly a matter for general congratulation; it indicates perfectly clearly to us that the time is not far distant when there will be no more discount, and it is clear from the remarks of Mr. C. J. Longman, who has always most strongly advocated caution in introducing the system, that he too looks forward to the time when all books will be net to the public. In replying to the toast of 'The Publishers,' ably proposed by Mr. J. D. Hughes, Mr. Longman said: 'They were there that night to celebrate what was now a fact and a great victory in their trade. . . . The result they all knew, and he sincerely trusted the new beginning which had been made during the past year would be continued and improved upon. They had not yet arrived by any means at the pitch which they desired they might reach in the book trade, and that was that all books of all descriptions should be published at net prices (cheers). That would be a most satisfactory thing for the booksellers, and also, he believed, for the public and for the publishers, but that would take a long time to bring about.'

One of the difficulties in connection with the net system which has faced us in this country, and has not yet been dealt with in a satisfactory manner, is the question as to how long a bookseller must continue to ask the full retail price for a net book which he finds he has little hope of selling at that price. At present it looks as if he has no power at any time to sell it at a reduced price, unless the publisher sells his stock at remainder price. It appears from the Publishers' Weekly that this matter has been dealt with by the American Associations and 'a happy solution of this difficulty' arrived at. Here is what our contemporary says:—

'The problem as to what to do with the books that do not sell has always been a serious one in the various plans for book trade reform. The publishers' plan has met this problem in a novel way, and the proposal regarding new books which become "dead sojers" not long after publication is one of the most ingenious features of the publishers' scheme. After one year from the date of original publication the retailer is to be at liberty to make such price as he pleases on net books, and the publisher is to have an option of withdrawing these books from the retailer on returning the price paid. This is a happy solution of the difficulty, especially in view of the fact that a book may be popular and successful in one part of the country, or among one class of customers, and not in another. The retailer who has not found a market for the book would not then be obliged to force its sale by slaughter prices if the publisher were wise enough to protect prices of a book generally saleable by accepting returns from the particular dealer.'

We do not think publishers in this country will care to have the life of their 'net' books restricted to one year in this way, and doubt if our American friends will find the solution quite as happy as they imagine; it amounts to 'on sale or return for twelve months,' or sale at any discount the bookseller likes to give, if the publisher declines to buy the stock back.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The announcement which has appeared in our columns and elsewhere respecting 'Britain's Austral Empire' may give an erroneous impression of the nature of the work, which was the original idea of the artist, Mr. Percy F. S. Spence, and has been carried out under his supervision. It is, in fact, a portfolio of photogravure plates from Mr. Spence's very fine drawings of all the Imperial and Colonial statesmen who have been associated with Colonial Confederation, and of scenes typical of Colonial life. The text, by Mr. G. Firth Scott, forms an introduction to the portfolio, and consists of a brief outline of the Federation movement, accompanied by short biographical notices of the subjects of Mr. Spence's drawings.

In 'The Evolution of Immortality' Dr. S. D. McConnell puts an aspect of the controversy that is novel. He refuses to believe either that all men have immortality or that none have it. Immortality is, he thinks, conceded only to those for whom it is a boon; the belief in it as a universal attribute of the human soul being not earlier than Augustine. Immortality, therefore, is a prize which may be won by any man who has attained to the idea of things good and evil in themselves, not merely forbidden or permitted. This, he says, is the doctrine of Christ, and was so understood by those to whom Christ preached, and by the whole Church up to the time of Augustine. Christ offered immortality in this sense, and the strength of Christianity lay in the novelty and fascination of the conception. These views are supported, of course, by extensive quotation from the New Testament. The Macmillan Co. are the publishers of Dr. McConnell's treatise.

Messrs. Bell will publish next week, as a companion to their 'Cathedral' series, a volume entitled 'An Itinerary of English Cathedrals for the use of Travellers.' The book was originally written by Dr. J. C. Gilchrist, of the University of Iowa, and has been revised by the Rev. T. Perkins, who has prefixed a chapter on 'English Cathedral Architecture' in general. The volume has numerous illustrations and a map.

Mr. Perkins has also written a volume, uniform with the 'Cathedral' series on Bath Abbey, Malmesbury Abbey, and Bradford-on-Avon Church, which will be ready in a week or two. The volumes on Ely, Bristol, and Ripon in the 'Cathedral' series will all be published very shortly.

Mr. Edward Arnold hopes to publish Major-General Sir Henry Colville's book, 'The Work of the Ninth Division,' on Friday next. It is just a fortnight ago since the manuscript was first placed in the printers' hands, and a series of eight maps has been engraved within the same period. Considering the care that has been necessary in correcting and revising the proofs, compiling the index, printing a large edition, and binding in a somewhat elaborate style, Mr. Arnold thinks he may fairly be congratulated on the speed with which this important work has been given to the public.

Messrs. Hatchards of Piccadilly have published a very nicely got up illustrated list of their bookstands for bedrooms and boudoirs. It is an excellent idea to encourage customers to have handy and handsome cases for books all about the house—the books will be certain to follow. As Mr. Macmillan said in his speech at the Recent Dinner of Publishers and Booksellers, 'we should always remember that in a country such as ours, with its constantly increasing population and its still more rapidly increasing area of education, the possible growth of the bookbuying habit is practically unlimited, and that to foster this growth is the duty and should be the aim of the retail booksellers.'

The programme and menu of the Publishers and Booksellers' Dinner was illustrated by a photogravure of a clever sketch by Mr. C. E. Brock, representing a bookseller of other days looking impatiently at the clock and scratching his chin, while an improbable customer, turning over the leaves of a tome, keeps him and his dog from their dinners.

Messrs. Macmillan, in 'The May Book,' edited by Mrs. Aria, revive the fashion of the annuals or keepsakes, with a charitable purpose. About seventy well-known artists and writers contribute stories, essays, poems, sketches, and studies to the quarto, and the proceeds will go in aid of the funds of Charing Cross Hospital. The hospital is in urgent need of funds.

For the cheap edition of 'The Northwest Passage,' by Lord Milton and Dr. Cheadle, which Messrs. Cassell & Co. publish, Dr. Cheadle has prepared some notes as an appendix, in which he points out that most of the changes predicted by the authors have come to pass. An interesting sidelight on the weird episode of the 'Headless Indian' is also given, which proves without doubt the accuracy of what was believed to be only a 'traveller's tale.' Since his return in 1864 Dr. Cheadle has steadily followed the work of his profession, and has gradually risen to a position in the front rank among consulting physicians in London. In 1867 he became Assistant Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, to which institution he is still attached as Senior Physician, and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in the Medical School. He was also for many years a distinguished member of the medical staff of the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond Street. Dr. Cheadle's chief recreation is fly-fishing; he is one of the original members of the Fly-Fishers' Club, and well known as an expert on the Test and other Hampshire dry-fly streams.

In the Secondhand Book Catalogue of Mr. Edward Howell, of Liverpool, No. 130, New Series, there is offered, at the price of £150, a magnificent set of Byroniana, absolutely unique, 15 vols., all on large paper, extra illustrated by the insertion of about 900 portraits of Byron's friends and contemporaries, views, scenes, &c., mostly in proof state, and some very scarce autograph letters and manuscript matter, &c.—all neatly inlaid or mounted where necessary, and uniformly bound in green morocco, extra gilt edges, contents lettered, by Hering, about fifty years ago.

The next volume of the 'Gentleman's Magazine Library' will be published during the present month, and will contain the contributions to the Gentleman's Magazine concerning the counties of Warwick, Westmoreland, and Wilts.

The controversy which is now raging as to the status of Russia in Manchuria renders a knowledge of that almost unknown but vast district of country necessary to the English reader. Mr. Alexander Hosie, who is the highest living authority on the subject, is publishing, through Messrs. Methuen, an important book entitled 'Manchuria: its People, Resources, and Recent History.' This book contains an elaborate map, specially compiled by Mr. Hosie, and many illustrations.

Messrs. Methuen are about to issue in their 'Little Biographies' a monograph on Girolamo Savonarola, the prophet of Renaissance Italy, written by Mr. E. L. S. Horsburgh, B.A., Queen's College, Oxford. It will embody, as far as possible, the results of the most recent criticism, and will contain illustrations drawn from contemporary sources.

A new novel by Ambrose Pratt, author of 'King of the Rocks,' entitled 'Franks, Duellist,' will be published shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. Franks is a dashing hero while Talleyrand, Napoleon, Pitt, the Prince Regent, and others who come upon the scene, are clearly presented. There is an interesting love-story running through the book.

Mr. B. T. Batsford much regrets to announce that the second issue of Mr. Edwin O. Sachs's monumental work, 'Modern Opera Houses and Theatres,' promised for the opening of the opera season, has been unavoidably delayed by the illness of the author. It is now scarcely probable that Mr. Sachs's work can be re-issued before the autumn.

'The Lost Art of Catching,' the title of one of the most interesting articles in the May number of the Monthly Review, is not a wail on the decadence of angling, as might be imagined, but a trenchant criticism by Mr. H. MacFarlane of what Mr. A. N. Hornby calls 'the shocking bad fielding' in the modern cricket field.

During the short time which has elapsed since its publication on May 1, a strong demand has arisen in America for Miss Bertha Runkle's historical romance, 'The Helmet of Navarre,' the total number printed to date being 100,000 copies. The novel was issued simultaneously in this country by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

Mr. Henry Harland's volume of stories which appeared some years ago under the title of 'Grey Roses,' and soon went out of print, has been reprinted owing to the demand caused by the success of 'The Cardinal's Snuff Box.'

Those interested in the literature of cricket may be glad to know that Messrs. A. Maurice & Co., 23 Bedford Street, Covent Garden, have just issued a catalogue of secondhand books and engravings on cricket, including many rare items.

Messrs. Pickering & Chatto, 66 Haymarket, London, have just brought out Part VII. of their Quarto Illustrated Catalogue of Old and Rare Books. It is the finest illustrated series of catalogues of secondhand books that has ever been published in this country.

Mr. W. A. Proud, 13 Suez Street, Warrington, is offering some 'scarce and curious' books on Angling in his No. 7 Catalogue.

NEWSPAPER RAILWAY RATES.

Those whose trade includes a newspaper parcel know too well what the railway rates mean. If at any great distance from London a halfpenny per pound on the weight of the parcel is a common thing, and this means swallowing up half the profits. An agitation for a reduction has been going on for some years, but it has at last taken a shape that should accomplish something if it is to be done at all. The Newspaper Railway Rates Reduction Association has been established, representing the entire newspaper trade, viz. publishers, wholesalers, and retailers. All the London dailies are rendering help, especially the Telegraph, Chronicle, and Daily News, and on Wednesday afternoon, June 5, there is to be an important conference at Anderton's Hotel to approve the petition to the railway companies, sign the same and arrange for its issue to the trade of the kingdom for signature. Mr. H. W. L. Lawson will preside on this occasion, and the Hon. Secretary (Mr. E. Gowing-Scopes) will forward a ticket of invitation to all concerned wishing to attend who apply to Boswell House, Bolt Court, Fleet Street.

THE WILLIAM BLACK MEMORIAL.

The William Black memorial beacon shone on Monday night over the Highland seas. No ceremony marked its lighting, but the following lines were written for the occasion by Lord Archibald Campbell and dedicated to the daughters of William Black:—

Here 'mid the splendour of the dying day—
We consecrate this Light—in Love's own way,

In silence all—
It is in silence that the day is born,
It is in silence that the day—well worn—
Sinks into night—

Is't not, in silence, that deep love is born?
It is in silence that deep grief is borne,
In silence all. . . .

Mrs. Black sent a telegram thanking each member of the Committee on the completion of the memorial.

TRADE CHANGE.

Owing to the death of Mr. Th. Wohlleben, 50 Great Russell Street, W.C., his widow has sold the export department of his business to Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Limited. Mr. Godwin, the manager of the late Mr. Wohlleben, has joined the staff of Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co., so that the old business will be continued under the new management on precisely the same lines. Mrs. Wohlleben, in a letter to the clients of her late husband, says: 'In thanking you for the kind support extended to my late husband for many years, I shall consider it a special favour if you will continue to give the same to Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.' All accounts up to May 8 will be settled by the executors of the late Mr. Wohlleben.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION AND ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

BANQUET AT THE HOTEL CECIL.

On Friday of last week, in the Grand Hall of the Hotel Cecil, was held the first banquet under the joint auspices of the Publishers' Association and Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland. The affair was a great success. Mr. Frederick Macmillan, President of the Publishers' Association, presided, and the following is a complete list of those who accepted invitations—nearly all of whom were present: Sir J. Crichton Browne, F.R.S., Sir Wemyss Reid, Hon. E. C. Stuart, Rev. Canon Ellacombe, Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Dr. H. Roberts, Dr. D. Walsh, Dr. S. Wellby, Messrs. F. J. Ackland, Mr. Ager, H. E. Alden, G. The usual loyal toasts having been received with the customary enthusiasm, the Chairman, in rising to propose the toast of the evening, was received with loud applause. He said: Gentlemen, the toast which it is now my privilege to propose is one which by those of us here who are publishers must be regarded as the toast of the evening—that of 'The Associated Booksellers.' I had the honour some years ago of taking the chair at a trade dinner, but on that occasion this toast was not and could not be proposed, for the simple reason that at that time the booksellers, honourable and honoured body of men though they were, were not organised and could not be toasted as an association. It is a great satisfaction to me that at the first dinner which has taken place since the Associated Booksellers have come into existence I find myself in a position in which it is at once my duty and my pleasure to propose their health and prosperity. I remember very well the first of these trade dinners, which was held in the Holborn Restaurant under the auspices of the Booksellers' Provident Institution—the only organisation connected with our trade which was then in existence—a dinner at which my friend Mr. C. J. Longman presided. It so happened that only a few days before the event Mr. Vernon Whitaker—now, I regret, no more—had been good enough to publish in the columns of the Bookseller a letter of mine dealing with the old and much discussed question of excessive discounts off new books. Mr. Whitaker not only published my letter, but he circulated, through the medium of his valuable periodical, a blank form which booksellers were requested to fill up and return to him in order that some sort of plebiscite of the trade might be obtained as to the possibility of introducing what is now known as the net system. I remember that I was more than a little alarmed at my own temerity when several references were made to this letter of mine by speakers at that dinner, nor was I less so when a few days later the periodical press, with that keen scent for actuality which distinguishes it, sent its representatives to interview the principal booksellers and publishers of the City of London as to the value or worthlessness of my suggested reforms. Although booksellers' associations had not sprung into existence at that date, press-cutting agencies had, and I was enabled with the assistance of one of those establishments to get together what was said by my colleagues in the trade of my modest suggestions. Well, I must confess it was not encouraging. Everybody who was interviewed was kind enough to give me credit for good intentions, but the general impression was that, although Mr. Macmillan was a young man (I may remind you that this was a good many years ago), he was a young man who meant well, but there was not the slightest chance that his suggestions would have any practical result. In the first place it was said the public had been accustomed to large discounts and would insist on getting them, and in the second place whatever might be proposed to mitigate this acknowledged evil would come to nought, because it was impossible to get booksellers to act together, and that, notwithstanding the fact that the trade in books was unprofitable and had to be bolstered up by profits derived from the sale of stationery and fancy goods, the spirit of competition was so keen that every bookseller who bought his wares on terms calculated to give him a living profit would be sure to dispose of them at a loss for the purpose of underselling his rival down the street. That was the real difficulty. There was no kind of cohesion or unity of action in the trade, and it was not until the formation of the Publishers' Association on the one hand, and on the other hand of the various associations of retail and wholesale booksellers throughout the country now working together in unison as the Associated Booksellers, that any satisfactory solution of the problem became possible. I am happy to be able to say that a new era has begun and that a better state of things both for booksellers and for bookbuyers is in sight—for booksellers the prospect of a fair return for their labour, for bookbuyers the prospect of dealing with men whose circumstances enable them to keep adequate stocks from which to make their selections, and who, relieved from the vulgar competition of price, can compete with one another just as eagerly in energy, intelligence, and knowledge of their business. I hope that, in speaking of the reforms which have been initiated, I shall not be misunderstood, and that it will not be supposed that I look forward to the time when, his rate of profit having been increased, the retail bookseller may sit in his shop with his hands folded idly waiting for customers who are to carry off the books which have been supplied to him by publishers on excellent terms. As a publisher myself of a not inactive variety, and having had the honour to act for a number of authors of phenomenal activity, I should be the first to repudiate such a suggestion. Far from adopting such an attitude, I am in hopes that the increased prosperity of the bookseller may lead to increased activity on his part. We have heard and seen a good deal during the last three years of various syndicates and companies hailing from the other side of the Atlantic who have dealt in books, many of them of British origin, and have succeeded in disposing of them to the British public in quantities and at prices that have been both surprising and suggestive. I am aware that these syndicates have provoked much antagonism among our retail booksellers, and I myself certainly do not approve of all the methods they have seen fit to adopt. But it cannot be denied that they have displayed extraordinary energy and enterprise, and that the principle upon which they have acted with such signal success is that the way to conduct the business of bookselling is not only to supply a customer with what he wants, but to prove to him that he wants what you can supply. I think that we should take this lesson to heart, and should always remember that in a country such as ours, with its constantly increasing population and its still more rapidly increasing area of education, the possible growth of the bookbuying habit is practically unlimited, and that to foster this growth is the duty and should be the aim of the retail booksellers. Gentlemen, I ask you to drink success to 'The Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland,' coupling with the toast the name of their distinguished President, Mr. Henry W. Keay.

The toast was received with much enthusiasm.

Mr. Henry W. Keay, in responding to the toast, said that the chairman in proposing it had said that he considered it to be the toast of the evening, and therefore he (Mr. Keay) ought and did feel a very proud man in having been selected by his fellow booksellers to respond to such an important toast, surrounded as he was by the princes of their trade. (Hear, hear.) But he would ask them to remember whenever they associated the name of a bookseller with that of a prince to bear in mind the second half of the title of Mark Twain's novel commencing with the same word. (Laughter.) But these were the old days; the best way, to describe the position of a bookseller of the present day, the first year of a new century, would be to quote a verse out of the Scriptures, and he believed they would gain great comfort from the Bible. The words of the text were 'Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.' Well, the poor booksellers were quite contented if they got the silver; they would leave the gold to the publishers. (Laughter.) And if there were any notes or cheques lying about after the silver and the gold they might go to the authors (renewed laughter). One might almost fancy they saw some of the old authors coming out of their graves and saying 'What is this?' and the present author would say 'What? Ah, Watt-s!' In the toast list they would notice that the booksellers came before the publishers, and then the publishers were succeeded by the authors. He thought it was rightly put, and for this reason—he well remembered addressing a meeting of the publishers and booksellers now some four or five years ago at Anderton's Hotel. They then had an Association of Booksellers, but there was no Publishers' Association, and in consequence of that meeting the publishers felt that the time had arrived for forming a Publishers' Association, and therefore naturally they followed their father, which was the Association of Booksellers. (Laughter.) He thought the publishers who were present would bear him out that he was quite correct in the statement, but he must be careful what he said because there were other toasts to follow his. (Laughter.) He remembered being present at a dinner at Brighton in November last, when a gentleman, a solicitor's clerk, who ought to have known better, used these words: 'That he must be careful not to tread on the toes of those who were to follow after him'—(laughter)—and for the life of him the gentleman could not see what they were laughing at. (Renewed laughter.) He had quoted from the Bible and he was now going to quote from Shakespeare. Shakespeare said 'Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.*' Well, they had made certain strides during the past year, they had done something towards the publishers and the booksellers' working together for the common good. (Hear, hear.) America had imitated them, and he was glad to find that they had there that night two gentlemen from America, Mr. Putnam the publisher, and, he believed, the Mayor of Philadelphia. (Hear, hear.) It was something for them to be imitated by our American cousins, for they were generally in front of us in all things, but they had followed with the net system and had gone a stage further than we had because they had arranged for the bookseller's profit to be a clear 25 per cent. Then in regard to France, he did not know whether they had noticed a very instructive paragraph that had appeared in the Daily Telegraph the previous week, which was to the effect that a combination of booksellers brought an action against a combination of publishers for damaging their trade. It was alleged that the publishers had made up their minds that they would not allow a further discount than 20 per cent. The result of that action was that the booksellers lost the day and had to pay all the costs. That was enough to make Lord Campbell come out of his grave and shake. (Laughter.) They knew how the action of Lord Campbell had always stood in the way, but they were thankful to say that Lord Campbell's judgment was no longer the bogey it used to be, the booksellers and the publishers had united together and had formulated a scheme which was being carried out in a friendly manner by both. (Hear, hear.) Of course, there were objectors, there always would be in any cause, but he rejoiced to know that at this time there was not a single case, with one exception, of net books being undersold throughout the whole of Great Britain and Ireland. (Cheers.) That in itself was a matter of congratulation to both parties, and he would like to tell them that the bookselling trade of England owed a very great deal to the courteous, kind, and painstaking way in which Mr. John Murray had fathered the scheme, and to Mr. F. Macmillan, for the way in which that scheme had been carried out during the year 1900. (Hear, hear.) He said that there was one exception, and that was the Library Committee at Cardiff, and he was sorry that there was that exception, because it had been brought about, to a very great extent, by the librarian. They were very fortunate in having there that evening the hon. solicitor to the Library Association of England, and he (Mr. Keay) was going to rub it into that gentleman pretty stiffly. (Laughter.) He supposed the librarian did not object to having his salary increased, and all they asked for as booksellers was a living profit. (Hear, hear.) He looked upon the combination and work of the booksellers and publishers as an endeavour to carry out the golden rule, 'Do unto others as you would be done unto.' He was sure they all wished success to the net-book system, and that it might be carried out successfully in the future. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. D. Hughes said the toast which he had

* The Reader points out that the quotation is from Colton's 'Lacon.'—Ed. P.C.

the honour of proposing that evening was that of 'The Publishers,' and it was one which gave him much pleasure and pride. The booksellers of the United Kingdom he was sure felt it an honour to be associated with the members of such an historic and honourable calling as that of the publishers. It occurred to him that it might be appropriate if he named a few of the historic houses that still pertained to them—names which were stamped on the literary history of this realm. There was the ancient house of the Clarendon Press, with its vast storehouses of the historic past, the Longmans, the Murrys, the Blackwoods, the Smith & Elders, the Blacks, the Chapmans and the Macmillans, and in connection with those great names he would like to be permitted to mention one who, he was sure, would have been with them that evening had he been alive—he alluded to the late Mr. Smith, to whom they were indebted for that great monumental work, 'The Dictionary of National Biography.' They remembered that those houses had numbered amongst their friends and patrons such famous authors as Scott, Byron, Wordsworth, Carlyle, Tennyson, George Eliot, Thackeray, Dickens, Ruskin, and a host of others. He ventured to say that never in the history of their common calling had such a representative gathering been held as the one that evening, for they all knew that in those earlier days both the booksellers and the publishers, or, if they cared to put it in this way, the publisher and the distributor, were practically the same. It was a pleasure to see the unanimity and cordiality that existed to-day between the twin branches, each of which in a way were dependent upon the other. (Hear, hear.) The publishers had well earned the respect and esteem of the booksellers by their kindness and generosity, for they had given up a great deal of their time in their efforts in furthering the net system, which was for the benefit of booksellers. He well remembered some eight years ago talking to a bookseller who was now no more, and he said bookselling would be a good trade if it were not for the publishers. (Laughter.) Then a few days after he met a publisher, and told him what the bookseller had said, and he replied 'Ah, bookselling and publishing would both be good businesses if it were not for the unreasonableness of the author.' (Renewed laughter.) He had not asked the authors their opinion, but he was glad to think that all that was now a thing of the past, and it was their heartfelt desire, every one of them, there that evening, that the two branches of that important calling might be under one association. (Hear, hear.) It was his privilege now to propose the health of 'The Publishers of the United Kingdom,' and he did so with the utmost pleasure and interest, and he had the honour of associating the name of Mr. C. J. Longman with the toast. (Cheers.)

The toast was warmly received.

Mr. Longman, in responding, said it was with very great pleasure that he rose to thank them for the toast which had been proposed in very kind terms by Mr. Hughes. He had remarked that the gathering was of a unique character. That was so. They had had other gatherings at which booksellers and publishers and authors had gathered together, but that meeting had been gathered together that night for a special purpose—a purpose which certainly concerned the authors as much as any, but which was primarily a matter for the consideration of the trade and perhaps in the first place booksellers. Although the three classes to which he had referred had joined together before in friendly intercourse, they had never met on such an occasion as that, which was essentially to commemorate a great accomplishment which had been brought about by the two classes of the trade. (Hear, hear.) He was sure it was a most satisfactory thing to all of them that they should have been gathered that night for such a purpose. (Hear, hear.) They now recognised that they all rowed in the same boat, and therefore it was necessary that they should pull together. (Hear, hear.) They were there that night especially to celebrate what was now a fact and a great victory in their trade, and it was a victory which had been effected without any bloodshed and without any tears, and which would bring sorrow and distress to no household, but on the contrary he hoped it would bring prosperity and cheerfulness to many households where those equalities and those feelings had been to some extent strangers.

(Hear, hear.) It was a victory which had been won by the Associated Booksellers and by the Publishers' Association. His friend, Mr. Keay, had reminded them that the Associated Booksellers were the first to join together. He (Mr. Longman) would not say the Associated Booksellers but the Booksellers' Association of London were the first to commence the work. It was perfectly true, and he therefore might regard Mr. Keay as his parent. (Laughter.) He hoped that anything the publishers had done in working out the question and what they might do in the future the booksellers would not, however, regard in the same light that he was told a grandmother did when her offspring taught her—they knew what. (Laughter.) The fact was that the Booksellers' Association were the first to bind themselves together, and they naturally took up the question of the excessive discounts that were given to the public; and the first fruit of their gathering he remembered very well, as far as the publishers were concerned—it was a meeting not like the magnificent gathering they had there that night, but it was a comparatively small one held in Anderton's Hotel about the year 1895. Invitations were sent out to certain publishers to be present, and he (Mr. Longman) was one of the few who attended, but he believed that that meeting was the forerunner of all that had taken place since. (Cheers.) Out of that grew a discussion amongst publishers. Private meetings were held at Mr. Murray's historic house in Albemarle Street, and one at Stationers' Hall, and from that grew the Publishers' Association. The Publishers' Association owed its parentage to the Booksellers' Association, and that being so they must regard as their grandmother the Booksellers' Association which was buried fifty years ago now. Mr. Keay had alluded to the judgment of Lord Campbell, which was indeed the funeral oration of that body. His (the speaker's) father acted as counsel for the Booksellers' Association at that arbitration. They had the same troubles, though perhaps in a less aggravated and less acute form than they had to-day, and they met them as best they could. They said, 'We will not have this,' and they drew up hard and fast rules, and anybody who did not obey was to be boycotted and driven out of the trade. That was all very well, but it did not work. They went too hotly at it, and that was the reason why they were upset under Lord Campbell's judgment. That recalled to his mind a story of an American who was present in South Africa soon after the disastrous battle at Colenso. He admired the pluck and the valour and the determination with which our troops attacked the hidden enemy and how they pluckily stuck to their task after being beaten back time after time, but he said to one officer, 'Colonel, can't you go round?' Well, that was the mistake which their forefathers made in the past—they could not go round. (Hear, hear.) And when the matter came up again the same mistake was made although possibly in a less aggravated form, but it was made. The first proposal, as probably most of them would remember, was that they should take the bull by the horns and by one stroke of the pen reduce the discount given to the public of 25 per cent. to 2d. in the shilling. The booksellers would not fall in with that way of being compelled summarily to agree to that, and therefore they came to the conclusion that that plan would not do. Then came a proposal from Glasgow which he (Mr. Longman) thought was too strong altogether, and then he remembered the meeting also held in Mr. Murray's house when it dawned upon them that perhaps it would be best to go round, and they devised means which should not be so strong or so revolutionary but which would be permissive. They were not going to make all books net all at once but they should be made net by degrees, and so it seemed that there was a way round, and by looking at the matter from a point of view which did not rouse opposition they got round. (Cheers.) The result they all knew and he sincerely trusted that the new beginning which had been made during the past year would be continued and improved upon. They had not yet arrived by any means at the pitch which they desired that they might reach in the book trade, and that was that all books of all descriptions should be published at net prices. (Cheers.) That would be a most satisfactory thing for the booksellers, and also, he believed, for the public and also for the publishers, but that would take a long time to bring about; but he could assure them that as far as he knew the feeling of the publishers—he believed he could speak for them—there was a strong determination to proceed along the line that had been marked down so far as was compatible with safety. (Cheers.)

Mr. John Murray, in proposing the toast of 'The Authors,' said that not many months ago he was in company with a friend of his who had recently come from America, which was then in the throes of the Venezuelan difficulty. At a big meeting on the subject a man had begun an oration, and he said: 'Gentlemen, this great, this mighty, this free nation will submit itself to the control of no one unless it be this great, this mighty, this free American nation,' and then there was a voice in the audience which called out, 'Hold on, old coon, I guess you have come out at the same hole that you went in at.' (Laughter.) He (Mr. Murray) felt himself somewhat in the same position, for it had been his privilege to propose the same toast as the one he was now entrusted with, or a very similar one, on many occasions. The last occasion upon which he had the pleasure was one upon which he stood in a position of splendid isolation. (Laughter.) He was honoured by being the guest of the Authors' Club. His brother was there, but he was removed from him by many rows of authors; everyone else in the room was an author, and from the extremely intelligent look of the waiters he should say that they were all of them either past, or future, or possibly present authors—(laughter)—and therefore they could well understand that at that gathering he had to be extremely careful what he said. (Renewed laughter.) To-night he felt himself in a position of greater freedom but of no lessened responsibility, for it was very difficult to say in a few words what one felt about authors, and if he began at the beginning he was confronted by the difficulty, 'What is an author?' According to a legal definition given to them in recent times an author might be a man who had had the cleverness to write another man's book, keeping as far away from the original words as he possibly could. (Laughter.) Or he might be an author who had written another man's speech, keeping as close to his words as he could. (Renewed laughter.) All the assistance they got from the law in obtaining the definition of an author was, that it was by no means necessary to write a book in order to be an author. Akin to the legal was the litigious author, and some of them had had experience of that species of the genus not very long ago. He (Mr. Murray) had seen the litigious author from the safe position of the witness box, and he had better not pursue the subject further in case he should make his acquaintance from the less secure position of the dock. (Laughter.) Then he was reminded of another specimen of the author, whom he would call the sanguine author. Not many years ago, when the late Poet Laureate died, and his office was left vacant for some time, he got a long letter from a gentleman who said that he had long been a poet, an unknown poet—(laughter)—but the office was going begging, and he felt sure that it was only necessary that his poetry should be published by the house that had brought out the poetry of Lord Byron in order that he should be selected by the Prime Minister for the office—(renewed laughter)—and he then proceeded to add: 'It has long been my intention to get married, and I think it is possible there may be a Miss Murray who has not yet found a husband, and if I might be introduced to her I believe my succession to the post would be assured.' (Loud laughter.) They might remember that Dr. Johnson once said of the authors of his day that they were moons—that was, that they did not write what was original, but that they simply reflected the splendour of the classics. It would be a very dangerous thing to say that all authors were moons—there were some very sunny ones among the authors of the present day; but his brother publishers, he believed, would bear him out when he said that whenever a sun appeared upon the horizon—the definition of a sun being a sale of 20,000 copies—(laughter)—the moons arose with the most absolute certainty; and there was also this peculiarity, that they always came and assured the publisher that their moony books were written long before the sunny books, and that it was only their own modesty which induced them to keep them back until the public taste was formed in that direction. (Loud laughter.) There was one more form of author, and that was an ideal and very beautiful form—the form which was presented to them by the Authors' Society. They there saw a cloud of beautifully painted and innocent butterflies, which by the force of some law of nature were attracted round the wicked candle of the publisher—they could not get away from it, and they required the gauze wire of the Authors' Society to protect them from singeing their wings. (Laughter.) But coming to more practical matters, Mr. Keay had alluded to a question with which they were all familiar—the question of the author's agent. He (Mr. Murray) felt a certain delicacy in touching that question. All he would say was that if an author felt that he needed assistance by all means let him have it in the form of an author's agent or whatever else he liked; but he would like to say this in all seriousness, that if ever it should come about—and he hoped it never would—that the authors should be separated from the publishers by those means, it would be a bad day for the authors. Let money matters by all means be settled out of court by other people; but many authors themselves would tell them that the growth of a book from the day the first sheet was put in the hands of the printer to the day the first copy was put in the hands of the public was frequently the most important period of its career and ways, the result of personal work and interchange of ideas, which often had a great deal to do with the development of a book. (Hear, hear.) He hoped sincerely that that form of separation would never occur. If he might borrow an analogy from history he would remind them of the practice of some mediæval kings who carried on their courtships and even their marriages by proxy. Henry VIII. occasionally resorted to these customs, but it had been found most unsatisfactory, and was now abandoned. Coming to the body of his toast, he was pleased to know that they had a large number of authors with them that night. They had Mr. Stuart, a gentleman whom he had not the pleasure of knowing personally; Mr. Barry Pain (who, he was informed, had plunged into the vortex of love letters, and who, he hoped, would come out unscathed); Mr. Atlay, whose name was well known; his friend, Mr. Kinloch Cooke, who before he took up the pen was a distinguished wielder of the willow, who having been a royal biographer had now become an Imperial editor. If there was one thing more indefinable than an author it was the Heathen Chinee, and Mr. Clive Bigham had brought home to them some of the facts in regard to the extraordinary character of that nation which they were not likely to forget. He was also delighted to see Mr. Newbolt, in whose books they all recognised a true refined ring of patriotism, and he might say that without being accused of advertising his firm, because these books were not published by them. He was sorry Sir Wemyss Reid was not present, but they had Mr. Clement Shorter, Mr. Bigham, and Mr. Landor—who had made most wonderful journeys in all parts of the world. There might be others, and if he had omitted their names he must ask them to excuse him. With the toast he had the pleasure of coupling the name of Mr. Gilbert Parker, who, having described to them the beauties of Canadian life, and having wandered to Egypt and the Channel Islands, had now found his way to Parliament, and when the Copyright Bill which the Government were now preparing came before the House he felt sure that Mr. Parker would do everything he could to see that the measure was passed into law. (Cheers.) The authors were the third branch of the great profession of letters. Mr. Hughes had said that they were a dual alliance, but in point of fact they were a triple alliance, and it was for that reason that they welcomed with the greater pleasure the authors there that night. (Cheers.)

The toast was very cordially received.

Mr. Gilbert Parker, M.P., in reply, said that if he were the only representative there that evening of the profession, trade, or art, whichever they might choose to call it, of which he was a member he should feel in one sense a sort of freedom which he did not possess. On the other hand, he felt a sense of responsibility which he was scarcely able to represent in the few words he had to say. The authors had received a certificate of character—literary character—that night in the admirable speech of Mr. John Murray which comforted them greatly. (Laughter.) In saying that he was of course only speaking for himself, for he thought his fellow authors would allow him to detach himself from them for a moment; but before he went further he would like to say that they as authors were grateful for the hospitality so generously extended to them and for the literary testimonial presented to them so handsomely by Mr. Murray. He (Mr. Parker) felt that he was quite justified in going forth into the highways and byways where publishers resorted, and demand an extra five per cent. royalty. (Laughter.) The satisfaction, however, that he felt might perhaps be likened to the feelings of the Irishman who when called upon to receive a testimonial to his greatness said to his audience, 'I wish there was a window in my breast that you could read my feelings there this night'; and a voice from the audience said, 'Would not a pain in your tummy do as well?' (Loud laughter.) The satisfaction he felt at being present was perhaps mingled with a little regret, because that alliance represented there that night might without any invasion of the interests which they represented have extended to the associated authors. For himself he could not see any reason why they should not combine, for their interests, if not identical, were similar. Each of them in their particular professions were only anxious to have those rights acknowledged and those interests sustained which were just, which were fair, and which were equitable. (Hear, hear.) He for one was glad the day was past when, with the exception of a few great authors and a few great geniuses, publishers were supplying private hospitals for the benefit of infirm members of their profession. That time had gone by, and he had a feeling that there was no one in this democratic age that should have a greater satisfaction in that fact than the publisher himself. It might be that they were not all geniuses. He had sometimes had it said to him, 'You authors—you are getting too wealthy. Look at Milton, he was blind; and Homer begged his bread from door to door.' That was quite a new definition, and upon that basis Nelson ought to have been a better soldier because he had lost his arm, and a singer should sing better because he had a wooden leg. (Laughter.) He himself believed that most practical business men recognised that authors would best serve their interests as well as their own if they applied to those relations which existed between them common sense, a fair knowledge of life, and a certain observation on the industrial and productive conditions, and if they applied those principles he fancied the last stage of the author would be better than the first. He did not think the publishers had anything to fear from the aggressiveness of the Authors' Society. It was the habit of youth to waste its force and be extravagant in the expenditure of energy, and it might be that in its first youthful combination the Society which had for its objects the proper insurance of authors' rights and protection of authors' property might have over-expended itself in energy, and a certain amount of foolish sentiment might have been expressed; but on the whole, as times were, he thought that the booksellers and the publishers of the kingdom would welcome the growing education of the author. (Laughter.) It must be admitted that the poorest member of the profession started at least with an affection for literature which was the salvation of the publisher. The time was, he believed, coming when they would find the authors working with the booksellers and publishers for the advantage of the triple alliance. He was glad of the opportunity which that gathering afforded him to say a word or two which he hoped they would take to heart. We, as a country, had to face this fact—that slowly but surely our industrial interests were being threatened on every hand by foreign countries—that slowly but surely American energy and American enterprise were wedging their way into British industrial and commercial life, and the American of all men used that position with an independent humour which was delightful to him, but which was disconcerting to us. Above all men, he was the best fighter and the most generous opponent in the world, but it was America first and last and all the time. (Laughter and Hear, hear.) They in their particular profession had to face this fact, that America granted them their copyright after a long struggle, and they still had to do in America what the Americans had not to do in England. Our laws were more liberal to them than their laws were to us, and the American said to Englishmen, 'All right, put the screw on and we will take away your copyright!' He could do it too, for the powerful organisations in American life, the great trusts, had a power which was not yet recognised in England, but which we would recognise to our great regret and consternation, and he hoped to the enlivening of our commercial and literary activities, before another five years were gone. At the present time we had great books coming into England—one of them known very well—which were being distributed throughout the length and breadth of the land, to the advantage, of course, of the reading public. The American was glad of his chance of doing that little job—he did not blame him for it, because he was perfectly within his rights, but why did not Englishmen do it? (Hear, hear.) And as to the value of that work—who disputed its general value? but he did believe that any compiler of a great book in England whose duty it was to bring it up to date would not, for instance, have made Stanley in that book just starting to find Livingstone, would not have made Beaconsfield English Premier as if we were still wearing his colours, would not have made McMahon the efficient President of the French Republic. (Hear, hear.) The Americans laughed at us; they knew they were a long way ahead of us in some elements of enterprise, and, depend upon it, wherever they could move ahead of us they would. He had no quarrel with America or the American public, but the game should not be all on one side. He was sure there must be a screw loose somewhere, and authors and publishers would best suit their own interests if they studied together those questions which lay before them. (Cheers.) After all, their lot was cast in pleasant places; it was more blessed for them to be serving the public good in the way they were, than to be the millionaire owner of a sweating factory or the proprietor of acres of jerry-built houses. (Cheers.)

Sir James Crichton Browne, in proposing the health of the Chairman and Vice Chairman, said their Chairman was no unworthy son of a most gifted and amiable father. They all knew Mr. Macmillan's achievements in this particular line, and he thought the country owed him and the firm he represented a debt of gratitude for what they had done in popularising and advancing science. Booksellers were invaluable, for they were carrying on a great work of mental hygiene. Tens of thousands of them would be driven to desperation if they were bookless, and for his own part he would rather go supperless to bed than not have a volume handy. They occasionally heard of some silly boy committing suicide after reading 'penny dreadfuls,' but he believed that thousands had been saved from insanity through the reading of good books.

The Chairman briefly acknowledged the toast, and said it had been a very great pleasure to him to have presided over that gathering—over that large and representative assembly. He was in the chair owing to the accident of his occupying the position of President of the Publishers' Association this year, a position he highly valued. He could not sit down without thanking those members of the Committee who had arranged the dinner, and also he would like to express their thanks to Mr. Brock, who had so kindly provided them with the beautiful illustration that adorned the menu cards. (Cheers.)

Mr. Keay also briefly responded, and the proceedings terminated.

The glees, part songs, solos, &c., rendered by the Ariel Vocal Quartette during the evening gave general satisfaction, and the dinner itself fully justified the selection of the Hotel Cecil by the Dinner Committee.

£1,475 FOR A FIRST EDITION OF 'THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.'

On Thursday, May 9, Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, of Wellington Street, sold a copy of the excessively rare first edition of Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress,' printed in 1678. The copy was not quite perfect, as will be seen from the following description from the auctioneers' catalogue:—

BUNYAN (JOHN) THE PILGRIMS PROGRESS from this World to That which is to Come, delivered under the Similitude of a Dream, engraved portrait of Bunyan Dreaming, R. W. B., fine impression but split across and backed; a small piece of margin of pp. 21-2 torn out making a letter or two defective; and margin and lower corner of pp. 69-70 also defective, a portion of the marginal note and several letters of the Text being torn away; pp. 139-40 split; otherwise perfect: containing portrait, title and Author's Apology, (6 ll.) text pp. 232, and The Conclusion, 1 leaf, Signs. A-Q3 in 8's, the portrait forming Aj, with Signature of Ann Palmer on title and Wm. Nash on reverse, original calf, a VERY LARGE COPY measuring 5½ by 3½ in. being the LARGEST COPY YET KNOWN Printed for Nath. Ponder at the Peacock in the Poultry near Cornhill, 1678

* * * THE EXCESSIVELY RARE FIRST EDITION, of which not more than five copies are known, three of which are imperfect. THIS COPY IS UNIQUE, in having the engraved portrait by R. White, which it has been supposed was only issued with the Third Edition. This portrait has the View of the City in the background labelled 'VANITY'; in that generally accompanying the Third Edition the word is 'DESTRUCTION,' and Mr. R. E. Graves discovered in the latter some slight remains of the original 'V and y' of the first impressions. He was of opinion that the portrait was originally issued with the first edition and had the word 'Vanity,' which was afterwards altered to Destruction as more in conformity with the allegory. [See Correspondence on this Copy in 'Notes and Queries,' 7th Ser. Nos. 12, 14, 17, and 19.]

This copy was given to Jane Fleetwood by her Uncle (Fleetwood); it then came into possession of Ann Palmer, who was adopted by the sisters of Dr. Fleetwood, Bishop of S. Asaph, then to William Nash of Upton Court, Slough, who gave it to the late Mr. T. A. Nash.

The purchaser of this very rare book was Mr. S. Cockerell.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Arliss Andrews.—'Lays of Ancient Greece,' by Eudemus. Second and cheap edition. This is an elegantly printed volume of pleasing poems now issued in a second and cheaper edition. The Lays are four in number, and their titles—'Marathon,' 'Thermopylae,' 'Artemisium and Salamis,' and 'Platea'—sufficiently indicate the undying interest of the subjects here so poetically treated. They are followed by a recitative pronounced by the Oracle at Delphi after the Battle of Marathon.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Cathedral Church of St. Davids: a Short History and Description of the Fabric and Episcopal Buildings,' by Philip A. Robson, A.R.I.B.A. The author candidly confesses that this treatise is little more than a careful digest of numerous works, of the more important of which a list is given. For ourselves we were afraid when we saw the nature of Mr. Robson's occupation in life that the book might prove a little too technical, but this is not so; indeed, it is a pleasure to be taken over the old Cathedral by someone who has a thorough knowledge and appreciation of its many architectural beauties. The book is a worthy addition to the 'Cathedral Series' of which Messrs. Bell are the publishers. Like preceding volumes, it is admirably printed and illustrated.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Eighth Duke of Beaufort and the Badminton Hunt: with a sketch of the rise of the Somerset Family,' by T. F. Dale, M.A. Following up his 'History of the Belvoir Hunt,' Stonedink of the Field now gives us a genial, well-written account of the not less celebrated Badminton Hunt, so closely associated with the Dukes of Beaufort. The main object of the work, however, is to supply a fitting memorial of a great English sportsman whose influence on fox-hunting, and indeed on sport generally, during the last century was possibly greater than that of any other man of the time. It is to this aspect of the late Duke's career that Mr. Dale chiefly devotes himself, and he is particularly careful to avoid trenching on private ground. In the earlier portion of the volume he traces the rise of the Somerset family, giving an interesting description of the second Marquis of Worcester and his father, the fifth Earl of that name. The Badminton Hunt is so bound up with the Dukes of Beaufort that in the account of the pack we practically get a history of previous holders of the title, but a chapter is specially devoted to the first Duke, the founder of Badminton. The life of the eighth Duke, the subject of the volume, in so far as it bears on our national sports is closely followed, and there are many readable pages on famous servants of the Badminton Hunt, its more prominent supporters and so forth. The book is certain to have a warm interest for the country sportsman and hunting enthusiast. It is supplied with some excellent illustrations and portraits, and in the matter of general production could scarcely be improved upon. Mr. Dale may be congratulated on his success in a task of no little difficulty.

From Messrs. Henry J. Drane.—'Cowper and Mary Unwin, 'Centenary Memento,' edited by Caroline Geary. The sympathy of the author with her subject is perhaps the most noticeable feature of this volume. It has evidently been a thorough labour of love to her, and though no new or original material has been introduced the main features of the poet's life, more particularly in his relationship with Mary Unwin, have been treated with such a reverential hand that the reader will probably be far more interested in the book than he would in an effort of greater purpose. It is a simple record, unaffectedly told.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Limited.—'The Campaign in the Free State and its Lessons,' by Major J. E. Caunter. This survey by a military man of certain aspects of the war in South Africa is very interesting, though it may be doubted whether it throws any fresh light on the situation. The points considered are the character of the country over which hostilities extended, more especially in relation to the railway communication from the coast; the actual operations of Lord Roberts's army during the march from Enslin-Graspan to Bloemfontein; and the principal tactical lessons that may safely be drawn from the war generally. The result of the author's observations is a high appreciation of the value of mounted infantry, a subject on which he is in disagreement with other members of the military fraternity. The book is supplied with two diagrammatic maps.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Parlous Times: a Novel of Modern Diplomacy,' by David Dwight Wells. 'The Dollar Library,' of which this forms an issue, appeals to readers particularly as a pioneer, but it cannot be said that in the present instance it has unearthed anything of remarkable excellence. Mr. Wells's production is made up of the usual elements so highly revered by the fiction-loving public—love, villainy, shrewd kind-heartedness, manly simplicity, &c.; but in any really original conceptions it is conspicuously wanting. We are afraid also the personal attributes of the leading character, Belle Fitzgerald, will scarcely be in accordance with English tastes. She savours too much of the American saloon bar. The entire story possesses a species of backwoods treatment which, while it may please the uncritical, will fail to elicit the sympathies of more refined thoughtful readers.

From 'Home Words' Office.—'New Century Hymns for the Christian Year,' by the Rev. F. W. Orde Ward, B.A. The earnest devotional feeling of these hymns is undoubted, but we may question whether the author has quite risen to the height of his powers. In turning over the pages of 'New Century Hymns' we have been struck by many passages of remarkable beauty and expression, and on the other hand confronted by much that is commonplace. But the book as a whole is worthy of sincere appreciation, and will afford much pleasure and consolation to the religious-minded.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'The Man in the Iron Mask,' by Tighe Hopkins. Illustrated. It must be confessed that the world clings desperately to the traditions of a long-cherished mystery, and we are far from certain that readers generally will be grateful to Mr. Tighe Hopkins for dispersing the clouds hanging over the identity of that much discussed personage—the Man in the Iron Mask. And after all, who, according to the latest investigator, does he turn out to be? Why, none other than Ercole Antonio Mattioli, the man who was first fixed upon as the victim, and 'whose pretensions to the mask have been canvassed, debated, approved, assailed, rejected, renewed, and are now reduced to demonstration.' We have every reason to be grateful to Mr. Hopkins, for we have spent as a book reader many happy hours in his company; but we have a sensation that on this occasion he has treated us a little shabbily. Surely he could have found some more surprising personage to fit the hideous mask on. If the mystery had to be exploded, surely it could have been done to a more appropriate fizzing and cracking of fireworks. But, alas! we have carefully gone through his reasoning, and the chain of evidence seems complete enough. Despite our inward wrath, we are bound to admit that we have found the book very interesting, and the author's lively and vivacious style adds much to its charm. Into the course of his narrative he has woven both legend and history, happily contrasting the two. As he puts it, 'a certain political transaction, not of the highest importance, nor of the most unusual kind, took place two hundred years ago in France. Out of this transaction has arisen the most extraordinary fable of modern times. But Truth has done her tardy office; and the moral, somewhat worn, speaks for itself.'

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack, Edinburgh. 'The Century Bible,' general editor, Professor W. F. Adeney; St. Matthew, introduction, Authorised Version, Revised Version, with notes, index, and map, edited by Professor W. F. Slater, M.A. The publishers of this series have had an exalted idea; it is that of issuing an edition of the books of the Bible upon the same plan as is adopted for standard editions of the classics. The present volume is really quite charming in its dainty binding, handy size, and nice legible type. It contains the Gospel of St. Matthew twice over. In the first portion of the volume is the Authorised version—the text only with occasional marginal references. The second portion contains the text of the Revised Version annotated, the notes being placed at the foot of each page. The scheme as at present announced embraces the whole of the New Testament in thirteen volumes, each under the special editorship of a leading scholar. When the work is complete in the thirteen volumes the reader will have the New Testament in the two versions, with all the notes of the Revisers of the Revised Version, but also the careful supervision of eminent critics, and in a most attractive and handy form. The volume is accompanied (as all the other volumes will be) by a very complete and useful index. It is printed at the Oxford University Press—which of course accounts for this use of the copyright. There are also two very beautiful maps in this volume.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám,' rendered into English verse by Edward Fitzgerald, with illustrations by Herbert Cole. A very dainty, artistic production of a poem which has become quite a classic among us. In consequence of exigencies of copyright the text given in the first edition of Edward Fitzgerald is followed, rather than the much expanded version of the three later editions. This, however, has its advantages, for, as Mr. F. B. Money-Coutts, the editor of this 'Flowers of Parnassus' series, in his preface, points out, the distinctive features of Omar Khayyám's stanzas are considerably lost in the process of higher evolution and the local colouring loses something of its warmth. The preface to the first edition, giving details of the author's life, is included, and there are also notes explanatory of the more obscure passages.

From the Leadenhall Press.—'Miss Spinney,' by the Rev. Sydney Mostyn. The lively animated style of this story and its many humorous situations are certain to ensure a large number of pleased readers, and had the author not allowed his proclivities to carry him to the region of burlesque, where everything loses tone, it would have been even still more successful. As it is, the story is quite irrepressible in its humorous vivacity, and loses considerably in effect from being overdone.

From Messrs. W. & J. Mackay, Limited, Chatham.—'Professional Papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers,' edited by Captain R. F. Edwards, R.E. Vol. XXVI. of these papers is not less instructive, from a military point of view, than any of its predecessors. Among the more important articles are 'Progress in the Practice of Surveying,' by Major A. C. MacDonnell, R.E.; 'Note on Royal Engineer Duties in the German Army,' by Major J. E. Edmonds, R.E.; 'American Bridge Types,' by F. E. Robertson, C.I.E., M.Inst.C.E.; and 'Railway Construction,' by W. W. Grierson. At the end of the volume are a number of lists of Service Ordnance, with details of guns, ammunition, carriages, and slides, reproduced by permission of the War Office. The various papers are improved in their practical value by a large number of plates which give lucidity to the text. The volume, we should add, is well printed and excellently bound.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Voyage du Novice Jean-Paul à travers la France d'Amérique,' par George Lamy, adapted and edited by D. Devaux, B.-ès-L. We have frequently had occasion in these columns to draw attention to the suitability of the works included in 'Siepmann's French Series' for educational purposes, and the latest addition to the Elementary division confirms our good opinion. The narrative of Jean-Paul's travels in Canada, though never of a very exciting description, has just that shade of adventure which will recompense the youthful mind for the consumption of the more solid instruction lying underneath, while the literary style and educational merits of M. Lamy's work are beyond question. As usual, an introduction, notes, lists of irregular verbs, vocabulary, and various exercises for instruction by the general editors Herr Otto Siepmann and M. Eugène Pellissier, are included in the volume.

From the same.—'Robert Annys: Poor Priest, a Tale of the Great Uprising,' by Annie Nathan Meyer. The pathetic story of a young priest who, determining to sacrifice everything for the people—to fight their battles against Mother Church, and to arouse them to a sense of their higher life and privileges—yet finds when the uprising takes place that it is all in vain, for the people are not ready for success, and, having no self-command themselves, they grievously fail in exercising command over others. Nor is poor Robert Annys himself altogether free from reproach, since he nearly succumbs to the fleshly attractions of a beautiful Delilah, and only protects himself by seeking safety within the arms of the Church he has renounced. The story is well told, with a refinement of style that enhances its subject.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Lighter Side of Cricket,' by Captain Philip Trevor ('Dux'). We have thoroughly enjoyed this book. To anyone who takes an interest in our leading field game, especially such interest as is based on practical experience, we can imagine nothing more pleasant than an after-dinner run over its pages. Points there may be for disagreement—the much discussed throwing question, for instance—but these are only the condiments that add zest to the repast. Captain Trevor, like all ardent sportsmen, is occasionally a little partial in his criticisms. Mr. A. C. Maclaren is evidently one of his favourites, and that gentleman's attitude in regard to his committee on the bowling question is especially held up for praise. The volume deals almost exclusively with cricket and its exponents at the present day, and little reference is made to the achievements of a bygone generation—for which we ought to be thankful. The subjects selected for treatment include: 'The Future of the Bowler,' 'Regimental Cricket,' 'The Leading Batsmen,' 'County Cricket Committees,' 'The Morality of the Cricket Field,' 'Fielding and Wicket-keeping,' 'Australian Influence upon English Cricket,' and other interesting topics. Mr. E. T. Sachs has acted as editor of the volume, and an introduction is given from his pen.

From Mr. Charles Murray, 7 Paternoster Square.—'Light from History on Christian Ritual,' by the Rev. Nathaniel Dimock, M.A. The author of this volume points out that while whatever may give reverent impressiveness to our Church services should on no account be neglected, there is also a need to guard against the possibility of our most sacred service being hidden under a mass of ceremonial, and clouded over by a musical grandeur which may have been originally introduced for the very purpose of doing it honour. In his delicate handling of a vexed question he principally relies for his arguments on authorities of the past, and such evidences as are to be gathered from history. 'The religion of the veil, the religion of ceremonial,' according to his reasoning, 'belonged to the old covenant. It is out of place in the new. Our worship must be "in Spirit and in Truth," not in shadows, and types, and symbols. As there is no room for sacrificial service save the spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, so is there no place for ceremonial service save as it may serve for decorum and order, and humbly minister to the soul's true worship in the newness of the Spirit.'

From Mr. John Murray.—'Little Arthur's History of Greece,' by the Rev. Arthur S. Walpole. A very successful attempt has been made in this volume to tell the history of Greece in a clear, simple, and interesting manner, such as is likely to fix the attention of young readers. In its preparation all the best authorities—Grote, Duruy, Abbott, Holm, and others—have been consulted, but the book, as the author points out, is no abridgment of any of these, nor does it profess to be exhaustive. After all in a work, of this description, second to the accuracy of the facts, it is the manner of the author that chiefly tells. If he has the ability of transmitting the information he has collected to his readers in suitable language, all is well; the power of attracting and holding the attention of young people is certainly not given to all writers. The Rev. Arthur S. Walpole seems, however, to be particularly gifted in this way, and his simple direct method should be attended by the happiest of results. The volume is supplied with a map, plans, and illustrations.

From the same.—'Side Lights on the March: the Experiences of an American Journalist in South Africa,' by H. F. Mackern. The hardships undergone by the war correspondents during the present campaign have not greatly exercised the thoughts of the public. Possibly the death of poor Steevens may have aroused some sympathy; but, speaking generally, people have realised little of the risks and dangers faced by the men whose energies have supplied them with their daily account of thrilling incidents and memorable events. Mr. Mackern's volume supplies an excellent idea of the power of resource necessary to the war correspondent, the many obstacles that he has to surmount, and the discomforts of his life generally. It was the author's intention originally to have attached himself to Lord Methuen's force, but being unable to obtain the necessary permit he availed himself of the offer of a pass to General French at Rensburg. He did not stay long, however, with this portion of the British army, but, pushing on to the Modder River, fell into the wake of Lord Roberts' division, and took part in the march across the Orange Free State. He was thus present at the occupation of Bloemfontein, and about the life in this town he has much that is interesting to relate. After this he proceeded north, being with the British forces at Brandfort, Kroonstadt, Johannesburg, and on the march to Pretoria. During his wanderings he took every opportunity of using his camera, and it is to this circumstance that we owe one of the most pleasing features of the book, there being about sixty illustrations. The object of the author, to use his own words, has been 'to describe the little things by the way, interspersed with some "philosophical" reflections,' and this purpose he has very ably carried out. The volume is a very readable contribution to the literature of the Boer War from a point of view not hitherto considered.

From George Newnes, Ltd.—'Five Years of my Life,' by Alfred Drayfus, translated from the French by James Mortimer. The greater part of this volume is occupied with extracts from the diary kept by the author during his imprisonment on the Ile du Diable. Frequent quotation is also made of the letters he addressed to his wife, with such replies as he was allowed to receive from her. A very vivid impression is in this way conveyed of the rigorous treatment Captain Drayfus was subjected to while on the island, the heroic fashion in which he bore himself in captivity, and the devoted sympathy and support he received from Mrs. Drayfus. As for the treatment, it seems to have been particularly severe, the prisoner even being placed for no conceivable reasons in irons, and thus fastened down to his bed at night, so that he could not move. In other ways, too, no opportunity was apparently neglected of showing a spiteful feeling, though this, no doubt, was the work of individual officials rather than of the Government. The volume is interesting, but we are afraid will prove a trifle disappointing to those who have looked forward to a record of a more substantial description, with less appeals to popular sympathy.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'A New Way around an Old World,' by the Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D. In this volume we have an interesting account of a journey undertaken by the author and his wife over the new all-steam route round the world rendered possible by the completion of the Trans-Siberian Railway. Dr. Clark left New York in the early days of 1900 on a mission connected with the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour in China, but a description of this does not enter into the purpose of the volume. He was now anxious to make his way to London to attend the Convention of the same society to be held there in July. The party started from Vladivostok and journeyed by train to Khabarovsk, thence by steamer up the rivers Amour and Shilka to Stretinsk, then again by train to Lake Baikal, where an exasperating delay of some hours took place before they could be conveyed across the lake to the village of Listvinsk. Here further obstacles were met with, but at length a train leisurely carried them to Irkutsk, the 'city of churches.' They then boarded the Trans-Siberian Railway, and after a journey pleasant by comparison with their previous discomforts, they were duly landed at Moscow, thence passed to St. Petersburg, so on to London, and eventually home to New York. Such is a bare outline of the route followed, but it affords little idea of the impressions produced upon the author or the actual experiences of his party. For these readers must consult the book for themselves. The book is very readable, if not particularly penetrative, and the numerous illustrations form an additional attraction.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'A Patched-up Affair,' by Florence Warden. This is rather a peculiar story so far as the actions of its chief characters go, but certainly not without interest. Most well-principled girls, we fancy, if appealed to by a lover for a loan of £500 in order that he might escape the consequences of embezzlement, would, perhaps (if wealthy), give him the money, but certainly dismiss the lover. However, Elsa Mason is a young woman of no ordinary kind, and she determines, come what may, to stick to her betrothed, even if he should be sent to prison. Fortunately the young man himself is made of different metal, and, being tempted by Major Stane, Elsa's guardian, with the offer of the £500, deserts her instead. Then the good Major looks about for a suitable husband for his ward. He quickly decides upon a retired Colonel named Cumberland, a man more than double Elsa's age, not good-looking, but of course possessed of a sterling disposition. Truth to tell, the Colonel has good need to show it, for Elsa after their marriage leads him a pretty dance. In the first place she only consents to their engagement because she thinks the Colonel will take her to Monte Carlo, where her quondam lover Barry is; and then on the eve of the ceremony, when she fully realises what she has done, she beseeches to be released. Eventually it is arranged that the Colonel shall assume the position of husband without exercising any of his rights. Henceforth he is the kind solicitous friend only, eager to satisfy Elsa's every whim and fancy, even to the extent of allowing Barry to be constantly in her company. And so the story proceeds. How it will end the experienced reader of this type of fiction scarcely requires to be told. Enough that crude sentiment will have its full share in the dénouement. There are no doubt numbers of people who will read Miss Warden's romance with avidity, but where either they or the authoress obtain their ideas of life we are at a loss to imagine.

From the Scientific Press, Limited.—'Burdett's Official Nursing Directory, 1901.' The fourth year of issue of this work sees an important change in its contents. 'Believing that it will be to the general advantage of those using "Burdett's Official Nursing Directory" to have the book in a more compact form, and, at the same time, at a cheaper price, the Editorial Committee have decided, after much consideration, to publish the work in future simply as a Directory, and it appears for the first time in this form this year.' The detailed account of the principal training schools for nurses in the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and the United States is now issued separately. The volume well maintains its useful character, and great care seems to have been taken to ensure perfect accuracy. An interesting article on the 'Principal Laws affecting Nurses,' by Mr. L. S. Bristowe, prefaces the Directory.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Colloquies of Criticism; or, Literature and Democratic Patronage.' The reader interested in books, more especially those belonging to the domain of fiction, will find many questions solved in this work which have hitherto perplexed him. He will be told, for instance, who buys the numerous six-shilling novels that are published, and why they are bought. He will also be initiated by a very pleasant process into other mysteries. We can scarcely agree with all the explanations offered, but we may at least confess to having found them very agreeable reading.—The form in which the information is given—a supposed conversation—imparts further attraction by its brightness and vivacity to the volume.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Limited.—'Nineteen Thousand Pounds,' by Burford Delannoy. Lovers of sensational fiction untroubled by restrictions of probability will find an enjoyable feast in Mr. Delannoy's novel. They will be introduced to some exceedingly exciting events, and will scarcely be allowed a moment for reflection until the last page is reached. The interest of the story is further increased by several appropriate illustrations.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have issued a sixpenny edition of Mr. Bram Stoker's 'Dracula,' one of the most blood-curdling stories that ever came into our hands. For vivid imagination and unrestrained 'ghoulism' it would be difficult to surpass it.—Another story of a much more pleasing and humorous description has been issued by Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson at the same price. This is 'The Skipper's Wooing,' by W. W. Jacobs, so favourably reviewed in these columns on its first appearance in book form some time ago.—A cheap edition has come from Mr. T. Fisher Unwin of Robert Buchanan's interesting novel, 'Effie Hetherington.' It is written in the most vigorous trenchant style of the author.—Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have added Fergus Hume's exciting story of 'The Indian Bangle' to their well-known 'Half-Crown Series.'—From Messrs. Methuen & Co. comes a new volume in their 'Sixpenny Library,' consisting of 'The Stolen Bacillus and other Incidents,' by H. G. Wells. These short stories are, for the most part, in the best manner of the author, and their present publication should introduce them to a more extended circle of readers.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

Britain's Austral Empire

THIS publication consists of a series of drawings and portraits with appropriate letterpress.

The illustrations, reproduced by photogravure, are portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, connected with the Federal Movement.

The artist of the portraits and drawings is Mr. PERCY F. S. SPENCE, a native of Sydney, N.S.W., whose exhibits at the Royal Academy for the last two years have obtained favourable notice, and whose black-and-white work is well known, not only in his own country, but also here in Great Britain and in America. Of his paintings, two are in the National Gallery of New South Wales; while his portrait sketch of Robert Louis Stevenson was purchased by the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, London.

The letterpress, which gives in a brief outline the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, is by Mr. G. FIRTH SCOTT, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring' and other works dealing with Australia are well known.

The book consists of Forty-one Photogravures $7 \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ inches, while the Letterpress is printed on Imperial Handmade paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole is contained in a Portfolio of White Vellum and Cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. SPENCE. Only two hundred and fifty copies available in this form.

PENELOPE'S IRISH EXPERIENCES

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of 'Penelope's English Experiences' and 'Penelope's Experiences in Scotland.'

SPECTATOR.—'It would have been a real Irish grievance if Penelope after duly chronicling her experiences in England and Scotland, had omitted to record her impressions of the Sister Isle. Happily, Mrs. Wiggins has been entirely equal to the occasion, and the new volume rounds off the travels of the delightful American trio in Great Britain in a most satisfactory and genial manner. Penelope, Francesca, and Salemina need no recommendation to English and Scottish readers as for Ireland, their comprehensive appreciation for all things Irish is sure to gain them an enthusiastic welcome from a race that is as keen to appreciate a compliment as it is competent to pay it. . . . We have only to add that Mrs. Wiggins has enlivened "Penelope's Irish Experiences" with a great many good stories and good sayings, that her representation of the Irish brogue is far better than that of most English writers, and that her pages are studied with apt quotations from Irish poets of all schools, from Goldsmith to Mordaunt O'Neill.'

SUGGESTED BRITISH ACADEMY OF LITERATURE.

'No time could be more propitious than the present for the foundation of a British Academy of Literature.' This, at least, is the opinion of a correspondent of the Morning Post, who contributes a lively, and perhaps but half-serious, article on the subject to that paper.

The suggestion is not a new one, nor can it be said that the new arguments in its favour give much hope that this literary academy in the air is likely to take more substantial form.

'No time could be more propitious than the present for the foundation of a British Academy of Literature. That money would be forthcoming there is little doubt; individual fortunes have never reached a higher point, and with this comes an increased struggle for life, a severer strain on the nervous system. Thus many a successful business man would signify his gratitude for healing hours spent in his library by a handsome subscription to a founding fund. The Cabinet might select, subject to the approval of His Majesty, the first members of the Academy, who would elect their president. Parliament would vote a yearly sum of money which would be at the disposal of the Academicians to be expended in salaries, pensions, and in prizes—of sufficient monetary value to compensate for six months' labour, at least, entailed in competing for them—for works of philosophy, fiction, poetry, and for essays in general subjects. In the case of a work of special value the Academy might issue it itself, or contribute towards its production if the expenses of publication were not likely to be exceeded by the profits of its sale. We are a rich nation, and can afford to pay those who, in spite of the proletarian taste, provide us with letters, and add to the glory of British literature. We might not—like the Académie Française—be quite exclusive, but admit foreign members, since occasional contact with men like Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Annunzio, Sudermann, would not only enrich the ideas of our own Academicians, but foster an intellectual cosmopolitanism in literature as there is in science. The founding of such an institution would evoke the thanks of future generations, perhaps more literary than our own, and would give an added dignity and incentive to the profession of letters.'

Would the money be so readily forthcoming from successful business men in return for happy hours in their libraries? We doubt it—they are not all Carnegies. The idea that the Cabinet should select the first batch of immortals is magnificent, but we fear that even the approval of His Majesty would fail to obtain general approbation of the selection. Parliament might certainly do a great deal worse than vote a yearly sum of money to be at the disposal of the Academicians for the objects suggested, and when all members of parliament are paid for their services those of them who happen to be also Academicians may be able to get a literary bonus thrown in.

'Thousands of pounds have been and are spent in encouraging art and the sciences, but nothing on literature. There has been here and there an isolated publisher who has issued works with more regard to their literary than their commercial value. But publishing under such conditions is not a lucrative affair, and an individual can hardly fulfil the function of a public body. Again, the book market is just at present in a somewhat parlous state. Publishers have always reckoned on America yearly accepting a large number of English novels for simultaneous issue, and authors have looked to that country for a considerable portion of their profits. But America is beginning to prefer American books written on American subjects by American writers. It is now no easy matter to "place" the ordinary good book in America at all. This means that the British publisher, in his decision as to the publication of a work, will be almost entirely influenced by its selling value, and soon the position of a writer will depend, not on what he writes, but on the number of editions his books run to. Writing will be merely a manufacturing concern. The war, too, has had a sombre effect on the book market. The books that were read when matters seemed desperate in South Africa were rather as narcotics to harrowed feelings than either thought-stimulating or pleasure-producing.'

It is quite true that American authors are obtaining more honour and profit in their own country than formerly, but as far as the British publisher is concerned we doubt if he ever got so much out of the American market as at the present time, and certainly British authors get far more than they ever did in the old days when their works were unprotected in America. We asked a leading American publisher, who was over here buying editions or rights of English books for America, how he accounted for the phenomenal sales of a few works published over there recently; he said that probably nobody had been more surprised than the publishers of them unless it was the authors—that it was perhaps a sort of literary craze or boom which carried such books as 'Trilby' and 'Quo Vadis' or native talent like 'David Harum' into editions of hundreds of thousands. He also explained that much of the enormous sales we have heard so much about was not due to even a passing fashion, but simply to the fact that many of the great dry goods stores throughout the country contracted for big editions to sell at cost or below cost or even to give away—simply as an advertisement. He also said that the improvement in the publishing business was simply due to the fact that business generally was flourishing—too flourishing to last, he feared—and that the result of over-production in every branch of trade would bring the inevitable reaction and depression sooner or later.

Whether the establishment of an Academy of Literature would be 'at any rate some compensation for a poor sale of books' seems doubtful. Then the suggestion of the Morning Post's correspondent that in order to raise the tone of literature in this country we should establish national awards, and crowns, and even subsidies for our authors makes one tremble to think what English literature would have been like if Chaucer, Shakespeare, and other of our uncrowned kings had been subsidised or crowned by Cabinet-elected Academies approved by the Crown. Thackerays receiving crowns from the Four Georges—what a picture.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Art Journal for June will be devoted principally to the pictures and sculpture now on exhibition at Burlington House, and the New Gallery. Eight full-page reproductions, including one of M. Benjamin-Constant's 'Queen Victoria,' and 37 other illustrations will be given. There will be two special plates; one, the frontispiece, being Mr. J. W. Waterhouse's Diploma Picture, 'The Mermaid,' and the other, Mr. B. W. Leader's 'The Weald of Surrey.' Mr. McGibbon will continue his article, illustrated by Mr. Scott Rankin, on 'The Glasgow Exhibition, 1901,' and current Exhibitions in London will be dealt with.

* *

Mr. J. H. Fowler, of Clifton College, has annotated, for use in schools, with notes of explanation, comments on metre, and illustrative or parallel passages, the poems in Book IV. of Palgrave's 'Golden Treasury.' Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are the publishers.

* *

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce that they have in preparation what they believe to be the first complete edition of the works of William Hazlitt. An introduction will be contributed by Mr. W. E. Henley; and the editors are Mr. Arnold Glover and Mr. A. R. Waller. The edition is to include Hazlitt's complete literary, political, and dramatic essays, together with his art criticism, miscellaneous lectures and prefaces, and his fugitive writings now first collected together. It is expected that this edition will run into twelve large volumes, which will be illustrated with a series of portraits of Hazlitt and his contemporaries. The first two volumes will be ready in the autumn.

* *

The new Borough Council of Lewisham have just appointed Mr. W. H. Bagguley to the chief librarianship of their public libraries, of which there will be four. This gentleman has for the past nine years held the position of deputy-librarian of West Ham, in which capacity he had the charge and management of one of the main libraries of that borough—that at Canning Town—a library which possesses a stock of 20,000 volumes, and is one of the most successful institutions of its kind in the country. In selecting Mr. Bagguley from the large number of applicants for the post, the Lewisham authorities were impressed with his exceptional Metropolitan experience, which included a share in the organisation and cataloguing of the Wandsworth, Wimbledon, Stratford, and Canning Town public libraries.

In his life of Mrs. Lynn Linton, published by Messrs. Methuen, Mr. Layard, while receiving every assistance from the novelist's family, has not hesitated to tell the true story of her wayward girlhood, her religious difficulties, her strike for freedom, her ill-advised marriage. He has lifted the veil from her remarkable autobiographic novel, 'Christopher Kirkland,' in which she adopted the curious expedient of changing the sexes of the actors for their better disguise. He has been fortunate in having at his disposal many unpublished letters written to Mrs. Linton by Charles Dickens, John Forster, Walter Savage Landor (to whom Eliza Lynn was 'daughter' to his 'father' for many years), George Eliot, Coventry Patmore, Mr. Henry James, Mr. Herbert Spencer, and many others of note. He has given the whole history of the fight which the author of 'The Girl of the Period' ceaselessly waged against

The sexless tribe, the 'shrieking sisterhood,'
Who made them masks of men, and proudly thought
Like men to do; to stand where men have stood.

And he has supplemented the whole with a considerable selection from her spirited correspondence.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week 'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.' Readers of 'The Visits of Elizabeth' must often have wondered what her mother was like. She was a young widow, very pretty and charming, and accustomed to dress exquisitely. Her adventures, too, were no less diverting than her daughter's, for she was herself much sought after by the male sex, and was accustomed, like her daughter, to play the ingénue.

Dr. Rutherford, headmaster of Westminster School, has collected twenty-seven of his sermons preached in the Abbey to his boys and publishes them with Messrs. Macmillan under the title, 'The Key of Knowledge,' which key he defines as a state of 'restless dissatisfaction with oneself, a continuous movement towards something never attained.'

* *

Mr. W. Carter Platts, the well-known humourist and writer, has just completed a new work, entitled 'Betwixt the Ling and the Lowland,' which will be published shortly by Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. The book deals with social life scenes, sports, customs, natural history, humour and pathos in and about a Yorkshire rural village. It will be illustrated with twelve full-page drawings by the author.

We may accept as a welcome sign of the gradual pacification of South Africa an announcement reaching us by this mail from Messrs. Darter Bros. & Walton, the well-known publishers and booksellers of Cape Town. This firm are establishing in July next, under the auspices of the chief Government officers of Education for Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal, an educational monthly journal, catering for the interest of members of the scholastic profession throughout South Africa. In Cape Colony alone, according to the latest Government Quarterly Report, there are now no less than 2,605 schools, employing a staff of 4,594 adult and 1,726 pupil teachers, and there should therefore be a large field for such a paper. A glance at the prospectus sent us shows that the publishers are sparing no efforts or expense to ensure the efficient performance of their project. Special representatives are being appointed in Natal, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal, and a London office will shortly be opened under the management of Mr. Stanley J. Killby, who is returning from South Africa for the purpose. Mr. Killby's old friends in the trade will doubtless be glad to hear of his return to London once more.

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have in preparation, and will issue shortly, under the title of 'Victoria the Wise,' a reprint of all the poems of the present Poet Laureate written to or of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria.

* *

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish 'The Canadian Contingents and Canadian Imperialism: a Story and a Study,' by W. Sanford Evans. The book shows the sacrifices Canada is making in the cause of Empire. The book is profusely illustrated from photographs.

* *

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly a new novel by Lieut.-Col. A. C. P. Haggard, D.S.O., entitled 'Love Rules the Camp.' Many of the scenes of this story are laid in Egypt, which the author knows well. There are numerous love threads which sustain the interest.

* *

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new volume in their 'Library of Devotion.' This book is entitled 'The Inner Way,' being thirty-six sermons for festivals by the celebrated mystic J. Tauler, with an introduction by the Rev. A. W. Hutton.

* *

Mr. Rowland Ward is about to add another volume to his series of standard books on the 'Great and Small Game of the World.' The author is Mr. R. Lydekker, and the forthcoming work will deal with the mammals of Europe, Western and Northern Asia, and America.

* *

John C. Nimmo publishes this week 'Two Moods of a Man, with other Papers and Short Stories,' by Violet Fane.

* *

Messrs. Greening & Co. are about to publish a new series of books for open-air summer reading entitled the 'Thistledown' series, in accordance with a suggestion thrown out in Messrs. Hatchard's Literary Magazine Books of To-Day. The idea is that, while the contents of the volumes are light as to literature, they should also be light in weight.

* *

We learn that Messrs. Deale Bros., of Bloemfontein, have taken over the Educational Supply Depot from the Government of the Orange Colony. Mr. S. F. Deale will be in London in the course of a few days, and will make the necessary business arrangements. His address will be, care of Messrs. John Walker & Co., Farringdon House.

* *

The Antiquary for June will contain, among other articles, 'Charles Dickens as an Antiquary,' by A. B. R. Wallis; 'The Moon and the May Goddess,' by W. Henry Jewitt; 'The Antiquary among the Pictures' and 'The Battlefield of Ethandune,' by C. W. Whistler.

* *

Among the articles in the June number of the Northern Counties Magazine will be found a new Jacobite song, by Mr. Andrew Lang.

* *

Messrs. Sands & Co. will publish immediately a new novel, entitled 'Lena Laird,' by W. J. Laidlay, whose book, 'The Royal Academy: its Uses and Abuses,' caused such a stir in the artistic world. This new novel will appeal to all interested in the welfare of the Royal Academy.

* *

Messrs. Luzac & Co. have just issued the second edition of Rogers's 'History of Babylonia and Assyria,' 2 vols. 8vo. The first edition was published in America, and was exhausted in a very short time.

* *

Mr. Percy White's new novel, 'The Grip of the Bookmaker,' will be published shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. It is the story of a wealthy father's arrogant pride in his son, and the humiliations which the latter has to suffer for being the son of a bookmaker. Eventually the young man is freed from his father's 'grip,' and wins the hand and heart of a noble lady.

* *

A new volume of verse by Mr. Marston Rudland, entitled 'Poems of the Race,' is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

* *

Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's new book, 'The Maid of Maiden Lane,' will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week, not having been published on May 6 as previously announced. The main theme is the love story of an Englishman for an American girl.

* *

Mr. R. Dobell, of 77 Charing Cross Road, has in his Catalogue No. 94 a list of books for sale from the library of the late Sir Wm. A. Fraser, Bart.

* *

Mr. Ed. Latham, 29 Paternoster Row, sends us a neat catalogue which he has compiled of books suited to the requirements of teachers and schools, forming 'safe reading practice in the French language for children and young people.'

* *

A second edition of Dr. William Barry's Irish romance, 'The Wizard's Knot,' will be issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

A new novel entitled 'The Nana's Talisman,' by Mark Ashton, author of 'She Stands Alone,' will shortly be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. It is an Indian narrative opening at the time of the Mutiny, based on a legend attached to a dagger presented to Nana Sahib.

* *

In the Beacon for May Mr. J. F. Meehan, the well-known bookseller of Bath, has an article 'Famous Buildings of Bath and District' with an illustration of Milsom Street—the Regent Street of Bath—from an old print by Malton in his possession.

* *

In the current number of La Revue de Paris, which Mr. Fisher Unwin now has ready, Mr. W. T. Stead has an article entitled 'Comment gouvernera le roi Edouard VII.'

* *

We shall be glad to have reports of any perfect or imperfect 1653 editions of 'Walton's Angler,' or any published during his lifetime.

Messrs. Gibbings & Co., 18 Bury Street, London, have just published a new complete catalogue of their stock offered to the trade only at net prices.

KIPLING v. PUTNAM.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons inform us that they have a report (by cable) from their New York office to the effect that the suit Kipling v. Putnam has been decided in favour of the defendants. The jury was not called upon to pass upon the issues presented. The Judge 'directed a verdict in favour of the defendants.' They say that case has been in train nearly two years, during which time they, the defendants, have done what was practicable to hasten the trial. They were from the beginning confident that Mr. Kipling's action had been based on some serious misapprehensions, and that he had doubtless been misled by his legal adviser. They find with renewed regret that, in place of leaving his counsel instructed or authorised to take the matter into court, Mr. Kipling had not been prepared to meet the suggestion for adjustment submitted by Messrs. Putnam. Messrs. Putnam had purchased for their retail department from Mr. Kipling's American publishers a small supply of the authorised editions of his books. It did not occur to them that in binding these books for sale, exclusively for their retail customers, and with the title-pages of the original publishers, they were doing anything that would be likely to cause annoyance to the distinguished author. As soon as they learned of this annoyance, they promptly offered to do anything to meet the wishes of Mr. Kipling, short of a sacrifice of the property which they had bought from his authorised agents. His counsel was, however, permitted to take the position that no satisfaction would be considered short of a 'substantial payment for damages.' In the confidence that there was on their part no infringement of law, and in the further certainty that they were free from any intention of causing annoyance to the author, and were ready to do all that might be practicable to meet the author's wishes, it was, of course, impossible, they say, for them, the Putnams, to agree to an adjustment in the form of a payment of damages, which would have constituted admission of wrongdoing on their part.

HOW LONG MUST A BOOKSELLER KEEP UP THE PRICE OF A NET BOOK?

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I am a supporter of the net system, as we all are now, but I desire to take exception to your suggestion that booksellers must not 're-mainder' a net book even when it is a year old. I should have no hesitation in reducing the price of any net book which had been on my shelves for a year past, if I thought fit. The case of each book must be considered on its merits, and no hard and fast line can be drawn in such cases; but if a bookseller cannot sell a book in a year, he cannot sell it at all as a rule. The American suggestion seems perfectly fair, for the publisher is quite at liberty to take his choice; he need not take the books back, if he thinks that the sale of a few isolated copies at reduced prices may safely be neglected by him.

Yours faithfully,

ALFRED WILSON.

THE NET SYSTEM AND THE COUNTRY TRADE.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—The 'net' system still being in a tentative condition, will you allow me to give two examples of how it works with the country bookseller?

I ordered a copy of Martindale's 'Extra Pharmacopœia' (Lewis, 10s. 6d. net) through John Heywood. It is invoiced to me at 10s. I demur to the charge, and Heywood sends me Lewis' invoice, showing the amount paid to be 9s. 6d. cash; that he has split the profit, and he refuses to charge at a less price than 10s. I am thus left to work on a margin of 5 per cent.; I have to charge the book to my customer's account, and probably wait some months for the money. If I ordered 'direct' I should be little better off: pay publisher 9s. 6d., postage 1d., cheque 1d., booking 2d., carriage per Sutton (say) 2d. = 10s.

The second example is 'The Record Number of a Glorious Reign' (London News), issued at 5s. and charged to me by Heywood at 4s. 4d. net. In this case the working margin is a trifle over 12½ per cent. But as the unavoidable working expenses of a miscellaneous country business—say with a turnover of £1,500 to £3,000—are, including interest on capital and allowance for bad stock, &c., 12½ per cent., one has to ask the question, Where is the profit? Certainly not with the country bookseller?

It is clear that if a country trader did the whole of his business—say £2,000 per annum—in 'net' books at 15 per cent. allowance, and no further discount from the publisher, his position would not be very enviable. He would have—after paying working expenses—as remuneration for his own labour, skill, and anxiety the magnificent income of £50 per year!

Yours faithfully,

C. W. EVANS.

THE MAN IN THE IRON MASK.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the notice of Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's book 'The Man in the Iron Mask,' I do not know whether it purports to be a translation or not, but, if not, may I be permitted to mention that I have a book published in 1883 (6th edition), 'L'homme au masque de fer,' by Marius Topin, dealing very exhaustively with the question, and demonstrating conclusively also that the mysterious personage was none other than the Italian Matthioli (or Matthioli)?

May I also say that I think the phrase 'Imitation is the sincerest flattery' will be found to have existed, as a proverb, at a date anterior to Colton's 'Lacon' (see PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, p. 556, col. 2)?

Yours faithfully,
E. LATHAM.

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been drawn to a kindly but slightly erroneous paragraph in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR concerning an edition of 'Adam Bede' in the 'Temple Classics,' which has been committed to my care.

The frontispiece to the second volume is not, as your paragraphist supposes, a house at Tewkesbury—a town which is associated with John Halifax, not with Adam Bede—but is a house at Ellaston, thought to be of special interest. With regard to the portrait of George Eliot's father, which I obtained permission to use as a frontispiece to the first volume, since the paragraph in question speaks of 'the original of Adam Bede,' I should like to point out that in the accompanying Note to this edition I have been careful to remind the readers of the novel of the following words, from Mr. Cross's 'Life of George Eliot,' in which the italics are mine: 'The character of Adam and one or two incidents connected with him were suggested by my father's early life: but Adam is not my father any more than Dinah is my aunt.'

I am, Sir, yours truly,
ANNIE MATHESON.

I might hardly have troubled you with this letter but for the fear of seeming to run counter to George Eliot's expressed feeling in this matter by allowing such an announcement, though doubtless most kindly intended, to pass unchallenged.

THE NAVAL ANNUAL.

'The Naval Annual,' 1901. (J. Griffin & Co., Portsmouth.) The new issue of 'The Naval Annual' is happily prefaced with a general article of much interest from the pen of its founder and first editor, Lord Brassey, who during his recent absence in Australia ceased to be a contributor to it. Lord Brassey appears to be fairly satisfied with the condition of the matériel of the fleet and with the amount of money now annually expended on it, but to regard with some misgiving the training of the navy. He is an advocate, however, of the retention of masted training-ships—a fact which, in the opinion of many, may put him wholly out of court. In the present volume the recent progress of navies is comprehensively surveyed by Commander Robinson and Mr. Leyland, the editor of the book. Mr. Thursfield describes the Naval Manœuvres of last year; Mr. Dunell deals with Marine Engineering; Sir John Hopkins writes on Fleet Auxiliaries; Sir Cyprian Bridge dwells on War and its Chief Lessons; Commander Bacon contributes some suggestive Notes on Naval Strategy; and the recent operations of the naval brigades in South Africa and China are described, though of course without much detail. There is also a useful paper on the Belleisle experiments. The annual maintains its character as an admirable work of reference, though it still falls short, as well in fulness as in accuracy, of more than one less expensive volume of a similar kind.

FOLLY OF UNCUT EDGES AND BARBARISM OF WIRE-STITCHING.

The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has been discussing the question whether the leaves of books should be cut. It is astonishing how long we in England can go on doing a foolish thing, all the time keeping up a controversy about it. Of course, the leaves of books should be cut—that is, books to be read. Even books that are more for show than use, éditions de luxe, can rejoice in their rough edges and all the other artistic characteristics of binding sufficient for bibliographic distinction, and yet be cut. As for the novels and essays, books of travel, reminiscences, gossip, and so forth, to leave the reader to cut the leaves is simple folly. A still worse thing than leaving books uncut, however, is the barbarism of wire-stitching. This is one of the grave faults of certain magazines which shall be nameless; one does not desire to run amok against publications which from other points of view are admirable. But it is surely nothing less than barbarous to engage fine writers, famous illustrators, clever engravers, and excellent printers to produce a work on excellent paper and then to wire the whole in such a way that it shall be given to no man upon earth to open the publication conveniently, and when open keep it there. Why don't readers protest? I suppose everybody is too busy to take any real useful practical interest in anybody else's affairs without some ulterior motive, and yet thousands of subscribers to the magazines in question must often be irritated into using bad language over the uncut leaves and the unyielding wire binding.—The People.

IN MEMORIAM.

MR. EBENEZER WARD.

We regret to record the death on the 19th inst., at Holmwood, Routh Road, Wandsworth Common, of Ebenezer Ward, late of Ward, Lock & Co., Warwick House, Salisbury Square, London, of which firm he was one of the founders. Mr. Ward, who was born eighty-three years ago, was educated at Christ's Hospital, and obtained his initiation into the publishing business in the house of Mr. Henry G. Bohn. He was connected with Mr. Bohn for about ten years, and subsequently took the management of the book department of Messrs. Ingram, Cook & Co. In 1854, however, he decided to start in business for himself, and through Mr. T. D. Galpin (who, with Mr. George Petter, had established the firm of Petter & Galpin, now Cassell's), he was introduced to Mr. George Lock with whom he entered into partnership, and commenced operations as Ward & Lock at 158 Fleet Street. Mr. Ward attended to the financial department of the house for more than twenty-six years, and owing to ill-health he retired from active business about twenty years ago. For the benefit of his health Mr. Ward has for many years past spent most of his time abroad, and consequently has lost touch with many of his old friends and associates. He leaves a widow and three daughters. The funeral took place at Norwood Cemetery on Thursday, the 23rd instant.

COLONIAL BOOKSELLERS.

MESSRS. HIGGINBOTHAM & CO.,
MADRAS.

One of the oldest Bookselling and Publishing firms in India is that of Higginbotham & Co., of Madras. Established in 1844, it has now had a continuous existence of 57 years, and in sporting parlance is still 'going strong.' The founder of the firm was Mr. Abel Joshua Higginbotham, who died in 1891. The following extracts from an appreciative article which appeared in the Madras Mail of August 1, 1894, on the completion of the firm's jubilee, gives concisely the history of the firm up to that date:—

'Prior to 1844 Mr. Higginbotham was the Librarian of the Wesleyan Book Depository situated in Black Town, which consisted chiefly of religious works. The Home Committee, finding after a few years that the undertaking was not a paying concern, decided to close it. They instructed the Rev. Joseph Roberts, who was their local chairman at the time, to dispose of the stock, giving Mr. Higginbotham the refusal on the liberal terms of paying when able. With such favourable conditions Mr. Higginbotham did not long wait to accept the offer; he at once closed with the bargain and immediately removed the stock to Mount Road to an unpretentious building which then occupied half the width of the entrance to the present premises. This stock formed the nucleus of the business which is now so familiarly known to all Madras and the sister Presidencies. Mr. Higginbotham, be it said, thoroughly understood his profession and took a keen and intelligent interest in literature. He knew something of the literary value of the books he sold and could converse with his customers about books and authors with some authority. His knowledge of rare books was indeed unequalled. He was always actuated by high principles in all his dealings. His maxim was "Live and let live." Both in business and in private life Mr. Higginbotham was very much respected. The qualities he displayed in the earlier sphere of his career developed as his business advanced. He was compared in Southern India to Longmans in Paternoster Row. His success was so marked that after the lapse of ten years he found his insignificant quarters a great deal too limited for his yearly increasing business, and he therefore resolved to erect more extensive premises of his own, and entrusted the present building to Mr. John Law, architect and builder at that time. When it was completed he removed into it and demolished the one in which he started, in view to securing a wider entrance. Mr. Higginbotham did a great deal in the cause of literature. He was not wanting in enterprise and spent a good portion of his capital in preserving rare and old books, and keeping before the public publications of a special nature which were becoming scarce. But for him very many old and valuable works would possibly have never seen the light again. A few may be mentioned here:—

Dubois on the People of India.
Moor's Hindu Pantheon.
Tod's Annals and Antiquities of Rajast'han.
Buchanan's Mysore, Canara, and Malabar.
Wilkes's Sketches of Southern India.
Beddome's The Ferns of Southern India.
Griffin's Aide de-Camp, or the Treatment of Horses in India.
Selections from the Asiatic Journal, 1816-1829.
Colebrooke's Essays on Indian Subjects.
Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law.
Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the E. I. Company.
Macnaghten's Hindu and Mohammadan Law

The Institutes of Menu.

The Indian Penal Code as originally framed in 1837 by Macaulay and others.

Ward on the Hindus.

Genealogie der malabarischen Götter, by Ziegenbalg. Translated into English.

'There are also many others which space will not permit. Mr. Higginbotham was associated as publisher with many Madras authors, of whom it may suffice to mention the following: Colonel Heber Drury, Dr. Bidie, Mr. J. Garratt, Mr. John Bruce Norton, Dr. Burnell, Dr. Balfour, Sir Whitley Stokes, Lady Grant Duff, Dr. Caldwell, Colonel Greenlaw, Sir A. J. Arbuthnot, Mr. J. D. Mayne, Mr. Justice Collett, Mr. Justice Innes, Dr. Short, Mr. Normandy, Sir H. S. Cunningham, Rev. Messrs. Pope, Percival, Kearns, Foulkes, and Jenkins, Dr. Ratton, Sir T. Strange, Mr. H. S. Thomas, 'Wyvern,' Dr. Sibthorpe, Mr. McIvor, Mr. Justice Holloway, and others. He had the extreme good fortune to enjoy the patronage of fourteen successive Governors, from the Marquess of Tweeddale, fourteen Commanders-in-Chief from Sir Fred. Berkeley, of the Judges of the Court of Sudr and Foudary Adawlut and Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature, from Sir E. Gambier, of Barristers and Attorneys, gentlemen of the Civil, Military, and Medical services, Educationists from Mr. E. B. Powell, Bishops and Archdeacons from Bishop Spencer and Archdeacon Harper, Chaplains, Missionaries of every denomination, native aristocracy, merchants, and the Uncovenanted Service, Mr. Higginbotham may be said to have known them by the thousands, and to the schoolboy and the young student the name of Higginbotham & Co. has become a household word.

'In 1875, when the Prince of Wales toured through Madras, Mr. Higginbotham had the honour of a visit from Dr. Russell, correspondent of the London Times. Dr. Russell was much struck with the extensive and valuable collection of books on the counter, which led him to ask Mr. Higginbotham if he possessed a principal in London who made the choice. He was surprised to learn that every book was the firm's own selection. Much to his (Mr. Higginbotham's) surprise, the firm had the honour of being appointed Booksellers to His Royal Highness, a mark of favour which no other firm throughout India had the good fortune to obtain. For this favour Mr. Higginbotham always felt himself largely indebted to Dr. Russell.

'After twenty-four years of continuous and arduous work Mr. Higginbotham resolved to retire, and sold his business in 1868 to his elder son, John Joshua Higginbotham, the compiler of "Men whom India has Known" and to his conscientious and energetic manager, Mr. A. W. Saalfelt. After doing so Mr. Higginbotham settled down at Bangalore. But he did not long enjoy his wished-for retirement. He had the misfortune to suffer a domestic calamity in the death of this son in 1874, which lamentable event happened seven years after he had taken up the business. By the terms of his son's will Mr. Higginbotham was forced to take up his son's share and remained in the firm till his death in August 1891. Mr. Higginbotham after his return took no specially active part in the conduct of the business but maintained to the last a lively interest in its welfare. In recognition of his worthy career and value as a respected citizen Lord Connemara conferred on him the dignified office of Sheriff of Madras in the years 1889 and 1890, which appointment gave universal satisfaction to Mr. Higginbotham's personal friends and the public. In 1879 Mr. C. H. Higginbotham was initiated into the business as an assistant, and in January 1888 he was admitted a partner. In 1891, on the death of Mr. Higginbotham, senior, he succeeded to his father's share also in the concern.'

With the advent of Mr. C. H. Higginbotham the firm commenced to extend its operations. A branch was opened in Bangalore, a military station in the Native State of Mysore, some 200 miles from Madras. The branch filled a want in the station and has from the first flourished. In November of last year the Bangalore business was removed into new premises specially erected for it, so that it now occupies one of the largest and finest buildings in the town. The opening of bookstalls at railway stations was also initiated by Mr. C. H. Higginbotham, and the firm now have stalls at all the principal stations on the Madras and South Indian Railways.

In 1897 Mr. A. W. Saalfelt retired from the business, which was then carried on by Mr. C. H. Higginbotham as sole proprietor. Mr. C. J. Higgs joined the firm as Manager of the printing department, and under his direction this branch of the business was largely extended. At this time the printing work done by the firm was almost entirely confined to book-work printing, but during the last three years a great deal of new type and machinery—for which new buildings had to be erected—has been added, until at the present moment the printing works of the firm are probably the most extensive controlled by private enterprise in the south of India. In 1898 Mr. Higgs was admitted a partner in the firm.

Amongst some of the more important publications issued by Messrs. Higginbotham & Co. may be mentioned the standard works on Hindu Law and the Criminal Law of India by Mr. J. D. Mayne, Sir Henry Cunningham's 'Law of Evidence,' Messrs. Gribble and Hehir's 'Medical Jurisprudence,' Col. Kenny Herbert's works on Cookery, Illustrated Guides to the Madras Railway and South Indian Railway, and the Calendars of the Madras University. The firm are the appointed printers and publishers to the University of Madras and are also printers and booksellers by appointment to H.E. the Governor of Madras.

The portrait we give is of Mr. C. H. Higginbotham, taken when he held the Lawn Tennis Championship for South India for seven years.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Life of the Bee,' by Maurice Maeterlinck, translated by Alfred Sutro. It may be forgiven us if on first opening this volume we imagined the insect under discussion might possibly be of the human variety—that down-trodden worker in the huge factories of the world whose hardships and surroundings form the subject of so much present-day discussion. But a very slight perusal showed us that this was not so. The work is actually what its title purports it to be—a treatise on the life of this most intelligent variety of the hymenoptera, written in a light, graceful fashion worthy of so interesting and dainty a subject. In the various chapters M. Maeterlinck considers several of the more prominent phases in the life history of the bee, and whether discussing 'The Foundation of the City,' 'The Young Queens,' 'The Massacre of the Male,' or 'The Progress of the Race,' is invariably a most delightful companion. The book is not in any way a guide to the management of a hive, but a disquisition on the curious, profound, and intimate side of its inhabitants. It is to the reader who is already an earnest student of bee life, and well acquainted with the science of the subject, that it will chiefly appeal, and to such we may warmly commend the volume.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited.—'A Vanished Rival: a Story of To-day,' by John Bloundelle-Burton. We know of few writers who impart a more happy tinge of vigorous romance to their works than the author of this novel. In his present work he is not quite seen at his best, but very near it. Of exciting incident there is certainly no lack, and from the time when Winifred Morland goes to Paris to act as companion to Florence Serpoli, and discovers that her old schoolfellow has a liking for the man she herself is enamoured of, the interest seldom wanes. In the involvement of a particularly engrossing plot the services of one Filippo Sarpi, an Italian of a striking personality, are effectively utilised, and he it is who in combination with Winifred Morland forms the evil influence of the story. It is Winifred who, for reasons which we must leave the reader to discover for himself, vanishes from the knowledge of her rival, and who at the close of the story disappears again. It is rumoured, however, that she has been seen in an inferior theatrical touring company in the provinces. 'Gone on the stage, eh,' the younger of the two remaining sisters exclaimed on hearing this. 'Well! I swear——' 'Why not?' replied the elder. 'If she can only act half as well on the stage as she can off it, she ought to do.' And in these words the farewell to Winifred Morland by her family is spoken.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Curious Career of Roderick Campbell,' by Jean N. McIlwraith. We are carried back in this novel to the days of Prince Charlie, or the Pretender, as he was variously styled by those who believed or did not believe in his claims to the English throne, and his memorable march south to Derby. With this historical event as a background, the author contrives to interest us very pleasantly in the doings of one Sergeant Roderick Campbell, who served first on one side and then on the other as circumstances compelled him, and during his exciting career was closely attended by his boy-nephew, Gilbert Forsyth, otherwise known as 'Touze-Tap.' The usual lovers also play their part in the narrative. Gilbert afterwards goes out to America in search of his mother, who is supposed to be located somewhere in the neighbourhood of Lake Horicon, and of course his uncle accompanies him. Here their experiences are even more remarkable than at home, and amongst other excitements Roderick falls into the hands of Indians and is compelled to paint and smear himself as one of the tribe. However, the story ends satisfactorily in the marriage of Gilbert and his settlement in Albany, where his uncle eventually takes up his abode. The story has many good points, though it scarcely justifies the anticipations aroused by the title, and by Scotch people especially it will be pronounced very readable.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Oswald von Wolkenstein,' by Linda Villari. This is a delightful biography of a very remarkable personage. Signora Villari, so widely and favourably known by her translations of her illustrious husband's 'Lives of Savonarola and Machiavelli,' and by her own charming stories in English, tells us in a preface that years ago, when staying in the Tyrol, she came upon an account of the last of the Minnesingers in a 'History of Bozen'; and, 'fascinated by the romance of his life, determined to write a short paper on it.' Circumstances prevented the realisation of this project at that time. Afterwards, revisiting the Tyrol, she recurred to it; but so much material fell in her way that the work assumed the proportions of the volume before us. Very charming is the result of Signora Villari's labours. Her book carries us back in the spirit to the far-distant days of Oswald von Wolkenstein; describes his haphazard upbringing in his ancestral home, the Trostburg; tells us how, when ten years old, he joined a crusade proclaimed by Duke Albert III. of Austria against the heathen of Prussia and Lithuania, and how when he returned home after fifteen years' absence he was a good linguist, an accomplished musician and tenor singer, possessed a store of general knowledge, and had a wide experience of human nature. Thus he was well equipped for the remaining adventures in his career so brightly chronicled by Linda Villari in this beautifully illustrated volume.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Limited.—'Photographic Album of Sandhurst Royal Military College.' This handsome album of views of Sandhurst Royal Military College, the Staff College, and of Camberley, with its introduction recording the foundation and history of the two important training schools for British officers, and of the fast-increasing town which owes its existence to them, forms a pleasing souvenir of institutions that reflect credit on all connected with them, and of one of the most beautiful and healthy parts of England. In these photographic views we see the cadets engaged in all kinds of military exercises. But it is not 'all work and no play' at the Royal Military College, and so we have photos of Sports Day, gymnastic competitions, cricketing, hunt meets, &c. This album is calculated to induce fathers who have sons they know not what to do with to send them to Sandhurst, and if they have none to take a run down to Camberley and visit the colleges themselves.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Sawdust,' by Dorothea Gerard. Nothing so much shows the ability of a novelist as the power of weaving an interesting story from simple material; and this is what the author has done in 'Sawdust.' The general character of the plot may be indicated in very few words. In the Lower Carpathians, amid a surrounding of pine forests, a huge saw-mill has been erected. The proprietor is one Josef Mayer, a self-made man of great business capabilities, who has been able by a shrewd bargain to become possessed of the neighbouring land. The mill, therefore, is for the purpose of converting the trees cut from the mountain sides into the requisite boards. Josef has made a fortune, but is too fond of his employment to think of relaxing his efforts. On the contrary, he rejoices in his occupation of an ordinary workman, and intends that his son Rudolf shall follow the same trade. Unfortunately the boy, who has received a better education than his father, is scarcely so keen in his business instincts. He also falls in love with the daughter of the impoverished Polish Count, from whom Mayer bought the property. There is little beyond this in the story. Of course Mayer opposes his son's choice, and equally of course the son, having something of his father's obstinate nature, perseveres in his resolution. How it all ends the book itself will disclose. As far as individuality goes, the two most interesting characters are Josef Mayer and his antithesis, Count Rulkowski, but the young lovers naturally occupy the foremost position in the narrative, and upon their doings chief attention is centred.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'The Story of Roger King: the Race he Ran, the Weight he Carried, and the Prize he Won,' by B. Paul Neuman. It required only perusal of a few pages of this novel to show us that Mr. Neuman was in admirable 'fettle,' as the north country people say, for the spinning of a yarn, and we had evidently a good time before us. The troubles and adventures of the hero—a well-dispositioned boy, afflicted with a strange and most abominably cruel grandfather—were also of a character calculated to secure ready sympathy, and we looked forward with interest to the account of his after-career. This turned out to be of a peculiarly eventful kind, for not only did he run away from his grandfather, but he fell among thieves by the way, and was subsequently rescued by an eccentric being who proved a Good Samaritan indeed. Subsequent chapters relate to his education in an architect's office, temptation by bad companions, love of a beautiful girl, and the elucidation of his mysterious parentage. Though it scarcely realises the anticipations aroused by the opening chapters, we can promise readers who are not problem-mad a very pleasant companion in Mr. Neuman's story. It is excellently written, bright and healthy in tone, and full of interesting, if not particularly profound, characterisation. The sub-title of the book we look upon as a mistake.

From Mr. George P. Johnston, Edinburgh.—'Some Aspects of Bibliography,' by John Ferguson. The contents of this volume, minus certain revisions and alterations, were originally delivered in the form of an Address to the members of the Edinburgh Bibliographical Society, on the author vacating the presidency, November 2, 1899. An appendix has since been added. The object Mr. Ferguson had in view was to induce members of the Society to execute whatever bibliographical work lay at their disposal; and the address is now published with the hope of encouraging others to similar labours. It is an interesting little treatise, the work apparently of a man who is thoroughly enamoured of his subject, and it depicts the pleasures of bibliographical research in very glowing colours.

From Mr. John Kempster, Police Review Office, 69 Great Queen Street, W.C.—'The Police Service of England and Wales: its Organisation, Disposition, Finance, Powers and Duties, Pay, Pension, Conditions of Service, &c., with Notes on other British and Colonial Forces,' by Stanley Savill. The title of this work conveys a very fair idea of its contents. Up to the present, the police, unlike the servants of other great public establishments, have been without a general Service Handbook. 'Many excellent local Instruction Books exist, many fragmentary treatises on various Police Laws, many attempted codifications of the criminal law, but no comprehensive guide to the Police Service, as a Service.' In the various chapters such subjects as the foundation of Police Institutions, Police Areas and Authorities and disposition of forces, &c., Police Establishments and conditions of service, Police powers and duties, Police finance and pensions are considered, and every detail of the question is thoroughly gone into. The book forms an authoritative manual on everything connected with the Police service, and should be useful to all who have anything to do, whether in a public or private capacity, with the constabulary forces. An excellent index adds to its efficiency.

From Messrs. H. Kleinmann & Co., Haarlem (London: 92 Hatton Garden, E.C.)—'Handzeichnungen alter Meister der Holländischen Schule,' Series III., Part 3. The lovers of art in this country should feel grateful to Messrs. Kleinmann & Co. for these excellent 'Reproductions of Sketches by the Old Masters of the Dutch School.' The part now before us embraces examples of Rembrandt Harmenez van Rijn, Adriaen van Ostade, Philipp Wouwerman, Adriaen van de Velde, Jan Steen, and Jacob van Ruysdael. All of them are excellently reproduced on old hand-made Dutch paper, of the same size, generally speaking, as the original, but for convenient handling and binding they are mounted on stiff paper of a uniform size.

From Mr. John Long.—'Once Too Often,' by Florence Warden. There are three stories in this volume, all depending more or less for their interest on a mystery. In 'Once Too Often,' a young fellow of a delicate and somewhat morbid temperament comes by some perilous experiences on shipboard and in South Africa at the hands of a mad doctor; 'The Mystery of Fourways' discloses the interest of a love affection, complicated by the event of a demented father masquerading in the clothes of his son and under this disguise committing a murder; while 'Missing—a Young Girl' relates the fortunes of an impressionable Englishman in Paris who falls madly in love with the beautiful decoy of an adventurer at the next flat, and eventually discovers as a clue to certain peculiarities he has noticed that she is deaf and dumb! The stories are told with Miss Warden's usual adroitness and constructive ability, but are not remarkable for any study of character or particular descriptive skill.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Notes on Speech-making,' by Brander Matthews, D.C.L. Mr. Brander Matthews has reprinted from the Cosmopolitan Magazine an article on 'The Four Ways of delivering an Address,' and from the Century 'The Real Secret of After-Dinner Oratory.' In so doing he has conferred an inestimable benefit on those unfortunate persons who, 'unaccustomed as they are to public speaking,' may yet be obliged to undergo the painful ordeal of attempting to deliver a postprandial oration. The writer modestly says of these articles that they are only hints for those seeking to get at some fundamental principles of speechmaking; but they are very useful hints, because drawn from his own personal experience; and are doubtless destined to earn the lasting gratitude of many a drowning after-dinner speaker ready to catch at any oratorical straw. They are contained in an elegantly printed and neatly bound volume.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—The latest volumes in the new two-shilling edition of William Black's novels sent out by the firm in Fetter Lane are 'Stand Fast, Craig Royston!', 'Judith Shakespeare,' 'Shandon Bells,' and 'The Penance of John Logan.' Now that the summer season is approaching, when all who can run down to the seaside, and the mind instinctively turns to thoughts of light fiction, no more entertaining companion in a book form than one of Black's stories could possibly be found, and in their new and pretty dress they should be assured of increased popularity. Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have also issued new editions at a popular price of Mr. Frank Stockton's humorous story 'The Hundredth Man;' that capital book 'The Farøe Islands,' by J. Russell-Jeffrieson and the Rev. J. B. Thomson's interesting biography of his brother 'Joseph Thomson: African Explorer.' Both of the last-named books (issued in Low's 'Travel and Adventure' series) are supplied with illustrations and maps.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Passing of Victoria: the Poets' Tribute,' edited by J. A. Hammerton. It was a happy thought of the editor of this daintily bound volume to collect between its covers some of the many poems in memory of our beloved Queen which have appeared in the various newspapers and weekly journals. Among the well-known authors represented are Thomas Hardy, W. E. Henley, A. C. Benson, Sir Lewis Morris, Flora Annie Steel, 'Violet Fane,' Dean Hole, Barry Pain, Herman Merivale, H. D. Rawnsley, Harold Begbie, Clement Scott, &c. In the notes at the end of the volume Mr. Hammerton not only gives the name of the newspaper where each poem first appeared, but supplies some interesting information regarding the life of the author. The book, both in its contents and general production, is well worthy of being preserved as a memento of a national calamity.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Redemption of David Corson,' by Charles Frederic Goss. We accept without questioning its truth the statement about 'The Redemption of David Corson,' that 'this book is having an enormous success in America,' for it is certainly a remarkable and ably written story. The character of David Corson, the young and handsome Quaker, for years subject to strange emotional experiences, is a very original conception, and of itself sufficient to make the book's fortune, quite apart from the gypsies, quacks, and other picturesque beings with which it is peopled, to say nothing of David's temptations and fall. Then comes the most extraordinary part of the story, David's redemption. It is impossible in the limited space at our disposal to give an adequate idea of the thrilling nature and sterling merits of such a work as this, so full of human interest and sympathy. But we can unhesitatingly recommend it to those in search of a really good work of fiction.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Russian Life in Town and Country,' by Francis H. E. Palmer. The reader will gather a very intelligent idea of life in Russia from Mr. Palmer's volume without having his attention distracted by discussion of deep-laid social problems or explanation of the political outlook. Naturally, the author expresses his opinions, but never in such way as to disturb the balance of the book. The various aspects of Russian life are described simply and unpretentiously, with an effectiveness that much more pretentious volumes might lack. Every branch of the subject—social, religious, educative, &c.—is treated of, and the result is a volume that within its size could scarcely be improved upon. Its attractiveness is enhanced by a number of illustrations.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Confessions of a Poacher,' by J. Connell. These 'confessions' will be viewed with varied feeling, according as the reader is a sporting landowner himself or only one of the general public with no personal interest at stake. But even to any man of fairness and judgment it will require some proving before he can agree that birds which have cost their owner something like a sovereign a piece for hand-rearing are as much the property of the first idle loafer who takes a fancy to snare them as they are his. Nor is it easy to see what real sport there is in stupefying roosting pheasants with the fumes of burning sulphur, or in making them tipsy with whisky-soaked barley, or in causing the silly birds to blindfold themselves with artfully prepared paper bags. In any of these ways, according to these confessions, it is easy enough to capture them. And yet the same writer is quite pious in his denunciation of battue-shooting! We are afraid the glamour that is supposed to surround the poacher's life disappears when his object is purely money-making. However, we have spoken of only one kind of game-snatching, and there are others which undoubtedly require greater courage and skill. Of these Mr. Connell gives a plain unvarnished account, and the chapters on dogs are especially interesting. The volume is illustrated by S. T. Dadd.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'New York,' by Edgar Fawcett. The sympathies of the reader will readily be enlisted in the hero of this novel. He is a young man who in days gone by, when under the influence of a worthless woman, has committed a crime and been convicted of it. Now, having served his sentence of three years, he is anxious to make atonement and lead an upright life. But this he finds is no easy matter. Even his friends who are anxious to help him will do so only with money; employment—a real chance of rehabilitating himself in the public estimation—they withhold. Mr. Fawcett has described this period in the hard career of George Oliver with a nervous intensity that will strike home to the hearts of his readers. Moreover, it is rendered still more effective by contrast with the charming personality of Doris Josselyn, who unconsciously acts as the young man's beacon star in life. At length George finds a friend in Albert Josselyn, a cousin of his father, who takes him into his employment as secretary, but under an assumed name. In this way he is brought into constant association with Doris, whom hitherto he has only worshipped from a distance. How bravely she stands by him when the inevitable disclosure comes about is admirably related. There are several capital studies of character in the book, that of Osborne Courtelyon, the cool, ambitious lawyer, being especially good. The portrait of Frank Creveling, most consistent of social missionizers, is also well drawn, but conceived in a more popular spirit. We can warmly recommend this novel to readers who like a story of strong human interest with a considerable admixture of romance. The scene of the narrative, as the title indicates, is laid in New York.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Limited.—'The Training of the Body for Games, Athletics, Gymnastics, and other forms of Exercise, and for Health, Growth, and Development,' by F. A. Schmidt, M.D., and Eustace H. Miles, M.A. A happy combination of science and what may be termed the recreative side of life is seen in the authorship of this volume. The scientific portion of the work, the information in regard to the bony structure of the body, the muscles, heart, lungs, digestive system, and so forth, is supplied by Dr. Schmidt; while to the care of Mr. Miles, a powerful exponent of tennis, as the list of his achievements well shows, fall the deductions to be derived from this knowledge, the task of showing how to learn and practise games and exercises, and of pointing out the advantages likely to occur from their proper adoption. In a series of appendices he also gives some useful advice on the subject of training and suggests several foundation exercises for games and athletics. The book, we are inclined to think, is a little overdone, and the prospective candidate for physical renown is burdened with an amount of technical knowledge that is not absolutely necessary. This, however, applies almost solely to Dr. Schmidt's portion. The section on the bones, for instance, might be considerably curtailed. On the other hand, the part dealing with the various positions and movements in exercises is both interesting and valuable. The authors appear to have made a genuine attempt to produce a book of greater weight and authoritative teaching than has yet been in existence on 'Training,' and speaking generally their efforts have met with success. The volume is appropriately bound and particularly well illustrated.

From Messrs. William Stevens, Ltd.—'Violet's Victory' ('The Family Story-Teller'). The victory which Violet Lelule gains in this very sensational story is over those who wish to drive her from Crenland Castle, a stronghold on the coast of Cumberland which, with the estates appertaining to it, had been conferred on a Le Lule in the Wars of the Roses by a grateful monarch. At the opening of the tale the owner of this property, Lieut.-Col. Lelule, has command of a force organised to quell one of the Pathan risings on the North-West frontier of India. Just before starting on this expedition he receives a letter from his daughter Violet informing him that she is being subjected to the persecutions of a Mr. Battersby, agent to the Colonel's neighbour, the Duke of Leland, from whom he had borrowed money on mortgage. Violet asks her father to come home. The Colonel imparts this intelligence to a brother officer, Captain Horford, who, in his turn, confides to Lelule that he has received from a legal firm in London news of the death of two cousins, owing to which fatality he will inherit about forty thousand a year. The expedition starts the same day, the Colonel is mortally wounded, and dies after receiving a promise from Horford to look after his daughter Violet and her brother Harvey, a boy of weak intellect. These two have no one to protect them from the machinations of the villain Battersby until the Captain shall have arrived in England. Here are all the elements needed for a dramatic story, and such is 'Violet's Victory,' which is very well told.

From Messrs. J. Walch & Sons, Wellington Bridge, Hobart, Tasmania.—'Walch's Tasmanian Almanac for 1901.' The thirty-ninth annual issue of this carefully edited little publication shows no diminution in the useful character of its contents from preceding volumes. Within its covers is packed a mass of valuable information relating to every variety of art, trade, science, government, recreation, religion, agriculture, philanthropy, education, sport, industry, conveyance, speculation, and law practised within the colony. To turn over its pages affords a liberal insight into Tasmanian affairs. So far as we can judge, the book in its present edition has been conscientiously brought up to date.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

The Publishers' Weekly

Established in 1872, with which was incorporated the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular (established in 1852), is recognised as the independent representative of the publishing and bookselling interests in the United States.

The central feature of the paper, that makes it an indispensable aid to the book trade, to libraries, and to literary people, is its Bibliographical Department. Every possible facility of reference is afforded by a combination of methods which records the books by the week, the month, the season, and the year, under the author, the publisher, the title, the subject, and the class.

The Literary Department includes comprehensive intelligence as to books forthcoming and publishing movements at home and abroad, editorial discussions on book and trade subjects, original contributions, notes on catalogues, notes on auction sales, journalistic notes, business notes, literary and trade notes, &c.

A minor, but practical and convenient, feature is the 'Books Wanted' column, giving subscribers an opportunity, under the most favourable circumstances, to search for books which may be out of print or unobtainable through the regular channels.

Subscribe on price, postage prepaid, $4 a year. Advertising rates on application.

From the same office are published: 'The American Catalogue,' 'The Publishers' Trade List Annual,' 'The American Educational Catalogue,' 'The Annual Literary Index,' The Library Journal, Literary News, and other bibliographical aids. Send for Booklet.

PENELOPE'S IRISH EXPERIENCES

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of 'Penelope's English Experiences' and 'Penelope's Experiences in Scotland.'

SPECTATOR.—'It would have been a real Irish grievance if Penelope after duly chronicling her experiences in England and Scotland, had omitted to record her impressions of the Sister Isle. Happily, Mrs. Wiggins has been entirely equal to the occasion, and the new volume rounds off the travels of the delightful American trio in Great Britain in a most satisfactory and genial manner. Penelope, Francesca, and Salemina need no recommendation to English and Scottish readers: as for Ireland, their comprehensive appreciation for all things Irish is sure to gain them an enthusiastic welcome from a race that is as keen to appreciate a compliment as it is competent to pay it. . . . We have only to add that Mrs. Wiggins has enlivened "Penelope's Irish Experiences" with a great many good stories and good sayings, that her representation of the Irish brogue is far better than that of most English writers, and that her pages are studded with apt quotations from Irish poets of all schools, from Goldsmith to Moira O'Neill.'

FASHIONS IN PUBLISHING.

When 'Pickwick' was first published in monthly parts, in green covers, at one shilling each, the trade, Dickens tells us, thought that a strange innovation was commenced, and that the three-volume novel would soon be a thing of the past. 'Pickwick' commenced in parts in 1836, and was completed in 1837, the year from which the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR dates its establishment; but the three-volume novel was not a thing of the past until nearly the end of the nineteenth century.

By the way, this raises the interesting question, Who published the last three-volume novel? We have an idea to Messrs. Chatto & Windus belongs whatever honour attaches to having produced the last representative of a form of publishing in which so much of the best of the world's literature has appeared.

The booksellers who thought publication in monthly parts a strange innovation were reminded by Dickens, in a preface to a cheaper edition of 'Pickwick,' that he got the idea from the recollection of certain novels which used to be sold about the country by Messrs. Cawthorne, Messrs. Cooke & Co., and other publishers. But the monthly part publication had its day —Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Anthony Trollope, and other writers benefited by it undoubtedly, and then it went out of fashion, until Messrs. Blackwoods published George Eliot's 'Middlemarch' in eight five-shilling parts in 1872, but the revival was not very successful.

The publication of the complete novel at sixpence is pretty general at the present day, but it also is by no means a novel innovation—if we may be allowed the expression—for novels were published at sixpence first in this country by Messrs. Macmillan we believe and then by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. about twenty years ago. They went off in large editions for a short time and then disappeared, the quarto size was against them—their real origin, we believe, was in the 'ten cent libraries,' published first during the seventies in the United States. Then after an interval of some years Messrs. Macmillan began the publication of their excellent octavo series of sixpenny novels with Kingsley's 'Westward Ho!' and they had the field almost to themselves for some little time; other publishers evidently determined to see how the experiment answered before following suit. There was a feeling that the publication of a well-printed sixpenny octavo edition of a novel would injure the sale of the more expensive editions, but the publication by Messrs. Macmillan of the exact numbers of their sixpenny editions printed and sold had a very stimulating effect, for the numbers run into five and six figures.

Then came the deluge of cheap fiction which has evidently not yet reached high-water mark. The fears that the sixpenny would damage the more expensive editions of the same work have proved groundless, as has also the hope that the great advertising given by the cheap issue would stimulate the demand for the better editions. The sixpennies appear to go to an entirely different public—one which has in a great measure been created by the Board School system.

The latest rumour in the air as regards popular demand for literature—no, that is hardly the word; 'reading matter' fits the case exactly—the latest demand is said to be for gaudy-covered sixpenny novels, at the expense, too, of the gaudy-covered cheap magazines.

In the meantime what an opening for an inventor who can make nice white paper again of the tons which are now so gaily and daily spoiled by printers' ink!

There is a growing demand for the publication of magazines at net prices, but what about the sixpenny novel? Would the booksellers prefer to have that net also? Some of them will not have it on any terms; but they are a minority who can afford to be independent of the popular fashion in books.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The King has consented to become Patron of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation.

* *

We give our readers this week an account of the presentation recently made to Mr. W. C. K. Clowes, Chairman of Messrs. William Clowes & Sons, Ltd., and an illustration of the very handsome service of silver of which it consisted. Mr. Clowes has been so long known to, and so highly respected by, all connected with the publishing world that it is with very great pleasure we give this record of the esteem in which he is held.

* *

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have nearly ready for publication a new work entitled 'A Retrospect of the South African War,' by Lieut.-Colonel E. S. May, C.M.S., R.A., author of 'Field Artillery with the other Arms' &c., Professor of Military Art and History at the Staff College. Lieut.-Colonel May, it will be remembered, formed and took out the special ammunition column which left England before the outbreak of the war, he took part in the defence of Ladysmith, and subsequently commanded a brigade division of Field Artillery in the operations under Sir R. Buller and General Hildyard in Natal and the South-Eastern Transvaal.

'Naval Brigades in the South African War' is the title of a new illustrated work which Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Company have in preparation. It is written by Officers attached to the various Naval Brigades and edited by Surgeon T. T. Jeans, R.N., who also contributes the chapter on the advance from Enslin to Bloemfontein.

'The Soul's Desires breathed to God in the Words of Scripture,' is the title of a little 'Book of Prayers for Private or for Family Devotion,' consisting of 'a sacred mosaic of over 2,000 quotations on prayer and praise,' by G. Washington Moon. This attractive little work will be welcomed by those who like to draw inspiration for their prayers from Holy Writ rather than from other people's ideas of how they should pray. The nicely got up little book is published by Messrs. Longmans. It is a companion volume to the same editor's 'The Soul's Inquiries answered,' of which more than 100,000 copies have been sold.

The Lady Mayoress, Miss Kathleen Haydn Green, is establishing a precedent. She is the first Lady Mayoress who has published a book during her tenure of office. Miss Green's first volume, a book of verse, appeared in 1899, and was the subject of much favourable comment. Her new book will be published immediately by Mr. John Lane. It is entitled 'Twelve Allegories,' and has a decorative title-page and frontispiece by Mr. Percy Bulcock, whose designs for the 'Parnassus' edition of Rossetti's 'Blessed Damsel' will be remembered. Among the titles of the allegories are 'The Man who had Nothing of his Own,' 'The Man who Sought the Unattainable,' and 'The Woman who Wasted her Tears.'

The Nineteenth Century and After for June has a strong list of contents, including: British Pessimism, by Andrew Carnegie; The Standard of Strength for our Army, a Business Estimate, by Sir Robert Giffen, K.C.B.; The Queen Victoria Memorial Hall in India, by his Excellency the Viceroy of India; The Religion of the Boers, by the Rev. Dr. Wigram, Canon of Grahamstown Cathedral; The Next Coronation, by L. W. Vernon Harcourt; The Pressing Need for more Universities, by Professor H. Starling, F.R.S.; Some Real Love Letters, by the Hon. Mrs. Chapman; A Land of Woe, by the Countess of Meath.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus send us a second edition of that capital Lancashire story 'Wildersmoor,' by C. L. Antrobus.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce that they will publish in a few days a new volume in their 'Haddon Hall Library'—'Bird Watching,' by Edmund Selous. There will be many illustrations by J. Smit, specially drawn from particulars furnished by the author and reproduced in photo-gravure and in the text, also chapter-headings by H. D. Astley and Arthur Rackham.

The sixth edition of Henry Norman's 'Peoples and Politics of the Far East,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin will issue next week, comes at an opportune moment.

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. have in the press the following new novels: 'The Maiden's Creed,' by Alan St. Aubyn; 'A Black Vintage,' by Morice Gerard; 'Whose was the Hand?' by J. E. Muddock; 'A Deal with the King,' by J. T. Findlay; also a cheap edition of Sarah Tytler's popular novel 'A Crazy Moment.'

Baroness de Bertouch, the authoress of the dramatic monologue 'The Outcast,' has just completed a volume of poems entitled 'Passion-flowers,' which will be published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall during the present month. A limited large-paper edition numbered and signed will be issued, bound in white kid and gold, and containing a portrait of the authoress who inherited her turn for versification from her ancestor John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester—who in the reign of Charles II. was not only famous as a mauvais sujet, but also as court poet, sonnet, and ballad writer.

Mr. Grant Richards will shortly publish 'The Story of the Stock Exchange,' by Charles Duguid, with illustrations from drawings by Joseph Pennell and Dudley Hardy. Mr. Duguid traces the history of the Stock Exchange—which has now reached its first centenary—from a time anterior even to the coffee-house transactions in Change Alley. The foundation, growth, customs, traditions, booms, hoaxes, and panics are all described, as well as the present position of the institution.

'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth,' which was issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin at the beginning of last week, has had an exceptionally rapid sale, being now in the fifteenth thousand, and another edition will be issued next week.

Collectors of books relating to America should note that in his No. 101 Catalogue Mr. Walter T. Spencer, of 27 New Oxford Street, London, has a long list of such works; under 'Sport' there are also many items. The list extends to over sixty pages covering all subjects. In a little note sent out with this catalogue it is pleasant to find Mr. Spencer, after thanking his customers for their support, adds a word of acknowledgment to every member of his staff of assistants for their services.

Messrs. Methuen & Co. have published a most interesting and fully illustrated 'History of the Midland Railway,' by Mr. Clement G. Stretton.

'Twenty Thousand Miles of Road Travel in Central and Western Europe,' by W. J. A. Stamer, author of 'The Gentleman Emigrant,' will be published in early June by Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

On June 11 Mr. Grant Richards will issue a sixpenny reprint of 'The Amateur Cracksmen,' by E. W. Hornung, which will doubtless secure a wider appreciation for these excellent stories.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week 'A Comedy of Political Life,' by J. A. Farrer, who will perhaps be best known for his contributions to the Speaker.

The experiences of an Imperial Yeoman at the front are given in a new work to be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title 'I.Y. on the Imperial Yeoman at War.'

Mr. Grant Richards will publish on June 4 a volume of poems by Nellie B. Badcock, entitled 'By Grey Old Gardens.' Some of the verses have already appeared in the Spectator.

Messrs. Methuen have just published a cheaper edition of Mr. W. W. Jacobs's book, 'A Master of Craft.'

Mr. A. H. Norway, well known as the author of 'Highways and Byways in Cornwall and Devon,' has written for Messrs.

Methuen a description of modern Naples with an historical account of its antiquities and traditions. The book, which is entitled 'Naples, Past and Present,' has been fully illustrated by Mr. A. G. Ferard.

Mr. Fisher Unwin has prepared a sixpenny edition of 'Eben Holden,' bringing the sales up to the 325th thousand, and will issue it this week.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish shortly 'The British Thoroughbred Horse: his History and Breeding, together with an Exposition of the Figure System,' by William Allison, M.A. Oxon, with illustrations. The author's name is familiar to owners and breeders of blood-stock throughout the world.

Messrs. Henderson & Son, publishers, St. Andrews, recently forwarded a copy of their Library Edition of the New Rules of Golf, as adopted by the Royal and Ancient Golf Club, to His Majesty the King, and have received the following letter:—

Privy Purse Office,
Buckingham Palace.

The Private Secretary is commanded by The King to thank Messrs. W. C. Henderson & Son for their letter of the 4th inst., and for the accompanying volume, 'The Rules of Golf.'

21st May, 1901.

The volume was beautifully bound in white vellum, the cover having a design of golf clubs and balls embossed in gold and silver. The gift was appropriate as His Majesty recently became a patron of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club.

'Pelican Tails' is the title of a volume of stories which Mr. Frank M. Boyd is editing for Messrs. Greening & Co., who will publish the book early in the summer.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a revised and cheaper edition of Prof. Stanley Lane-Poole's well-known 'Life of Sir Harry Parkes,' who was one of the most famous and successful of British Ministers in China.

'Laboremus,' Björnson's play in three acts which appeared in the Fortnightly Review for May, will be published by Chapman & Hall in a few days, in book form.

Messrs. Jarvis & Foster, of Bangor, will publish this summer a limited edition of 'The History of Friars School, Bangor,' by Henry Barber, Solicitor, and Henry Lewis, Chairman of the Governing Body.

In Queensland at the end of last year there were 884 schools in operation, comprising 412 State and 469 provisional, together with 3 special schools, being a net increase for the year of 51 schools; the total number of schools open during some part of the year was 888.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston have brought out an excellent pocket map of London and the South, size $21\frac{1}{2} \times 25$, three miles to the inch. All main roads coloured red and dangerous hills marked. It includes the Sussex Coast from Bognor to Bexhill, and will be found most useful by cyclists, anglers, and tourists.

The Scotsman jokes! In a kindly notice of 'Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days,' by E. Marston, it says:—'Authors have already suffered much at the hands of publishers and booksellers; but a certain nimety arises when the publisher and bookseller enters into competition with authors at their own trade, and himself writes a book. Mr. Marston is now the oldest London publisher, however, and things may be permitted him which, if Mr. John Lane (for example) were to try on, the Society of Authors would punch his Bodley Head for him. For Mr. Marston's offence, moreover, it may be pleaded in extenuation that, while certainly a book, a child of the brain, it is nevertheless a very little one. It is made up of eight pleasant, often humorously written, sketches of the lives of historic bibliopoles: Jacob Tonson, most renowned of all; Samuel Richardson (whom, no doubt, Mr. Marston believes, though he does not say so, to have thrown himself away on "Clarissa" and work of that kind); and, not to mention the others, Thomas Gent and James Lackington, in whose London house the late Adam Black, of Edinburgh, served as a boy. Portraits and pictures agreeably supplement the literary sketches. The work will interest anyone who reads it, and cast a peculiar spell over the many booklovers whom the eighteenth century primly bewitches.'

Mr. Frank Hollings, of 7 Great Turnstile, Holborn, will shortly issue, in a limited edition, an enlarged reprint of the 'Notes for a Bibliography of Edward FitzGerald,' by Colonel W. F. Prideaux, C.S.I., of which a few copies were printed for private circulation last year. In addition to a bibliographical list of all the works which were published or privately printed during the lifetime of FitzGerald, this edition will contain some notes on Crabbe, which have never been previously reprinted in England, and a characteristic back view of FitzGerald seated at his harmonium, from a sketch by the late Charles Keene in the possession of Mr. Bain, of the Haymarket, who has kindly undertaken its reproduction. A few copies will be struck off on large paper, with the frontispiece on Japanese vellum.

Topography and county maps, old almanacks and old newspapers, criminal trials and Shakespeareana are subjects which figure in the secondhand catalogue of Mr. A. Russell Smith, 24 Great Windmill Street, London.

Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will sell the fine Barrois Collection of Manuscripts belonging to the Earl of Ashburnham on Monday, June 10, and the following four days. This collection was originally made by M. Paul Barrois before the Revolution in Paris in 1848, and was purchased from him by the late Earl in 1849. It comprises manuscripts of great importance and varied interest—historical, theological, literary, and artistic.

Mr. Grant Richards has an important novel ready for publication on June 11, by Mr. Harold Begbie, who has hitherto been known as the author of 'The Handy Man,' 'The Story of Baden-Powell,' 'The Political Struwwelpeter,' &c. 'The Fall of the Curtain' is Mr. Begbie's first novel, but the American copyright has already been disposed of to a firm which shares the English publisher's confidence of the success of the book.

THE REV. WM. BRIGGS, D.D.
Manager, The Methodist Book and Publishing House, Toronto.

A companion volume to 'As the Chinese See Us,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin has lately published, entitled 'China under the Searchlight,' by W. A. Cornaby, will be published by the same firm next week. In the present work the author discusses many things as seen from the inside.

Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co. have nearly ready for publication a work on 'Drying by Means of Air and Steam,' Explanations, Formulae and Tables for Use in Practice, a Book for Manufacturers, Technical Chemists, Engineers &c., by E. Hausbrand. Translated from the German by A. C. Wright, M.A.

Messrs. Dent will shortly publish in their 'Mediaeval Town' series 'The Story of Bruges,' by Ernest Gilliat Smith. The book will be very fully illustrated by Herbert Railton and Edith Calvert, and will also contain several photographic reproductions from paintings.

A new novel, entitled 'The Case and the Cure,' by Miss Gertrude Gordon, will shortly be published by Messrs. Sands & Co.

'Diary of a Nurse in South Africa' is the title of a book by Alice Bron, which Chapman & Hall will issue in a few days. Madame Bron was a nurse in the Franco-German War, and she went to Africa as a member of the staff of the Dutch and Belgian Red Cross Associations, in the Boer Hospital Service.

Messrs. Bousfield & Co. will publish, very shortly, a book entitled 'Secret Chambers and Hiding Places of Great Britain,' by Allan Fea. The book deals with the historic, romantic, and legendary stories and traditions about priests' holes, secret chambers, and other hiding-places. It will be illustrated with a great number of drawings by the author.

COLONIAL BOOKSELLERS.

THE METHODIST BOOK AND PUBLISHING HOUSE, TORONTO, CANADA.

The Methodist Book and Publishing House the oldest established and largest publishing house in Canada, is an institution owned and governed by the Methodist Church in Canada. Originally established in 1829 in very humble beginnings, it has steadily grown, until to-day it occupies an imposing building with six stories fronting on Richmond Street West and six on Temperance Street. These premises have been occupied since 1889, since when, to meet pressing demands, three stories have been added to the rear and two to the front section of the building. There are eight departments in the establishment, viz. printing, binding, electrotyping and stereotyping, periodicals, book publishing, subscription books, wholesale book department, and retail book department. In these some 350 employés are engaged.

The various departments are provided with the latest machinery. In the press-room twenty cylinder presses are constantly in use, the motive power supplied by two steam engines. An up-to-date electric light plant supplies every part of the building with abundant light.

The various Connexional periodicals, including the Christian Guardian—the oldest and most widely circulated religious weekly in the country—now have an aggregate issue of 300,000 copies.

Though a Connexional concern, the house does an extensive general publishing business, including a large output of high-class fiction by the popular writers of the day. Representatives of the House visit the trade in every part of the country. Mr. S. B. Gundy, its European buyer, is well known to the British publishing houses.

The 'Book Room,' as it is popularly called, has won a reputation for the number and importance of its works by Canadian writers. It has sought to encourage the growth and development of a Canadian literature, and the imprint of William Briggs is one of the most familiar in public and private libraries.

The management of this important concern is now, and has been for twenty-one years, in the hands of the Rev. Wm. Briggs, D.D., who was called from the pastorate to fill this wider field of service to Canadian Methodism and to the publishing interests of the country, in which few men are better known or more widely respected.

'ANOTHER WOMAN'S TERRITORY.'

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Permit me to sincerely thank you for the very favourable notice given to my book 'Another Woman's Territory' in your issue of May 11. Her Majesty the Queen has honoured me by accepting a copy of the book, the scenes of which are among those made historic by the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York to Australia. Would you very kindly notice this honour?

Sincerely yours,
'ALIEN.'

THE MILLENNIAL OF ALFRED THE GREAT.

The present year is the millennial of the death of Alfred the Great. He was born, according to the commonly accepted authorities, in 849, and died in 901. A celebration of the millennial of his birth was held at Wantage, his birthplace, in 1849. A more impressive commemoration of the millennial of his death will be held at Winchester some time during the present year; and a magnificent monument will then and there be dedicated. A large English committee has been preparing for this millennial observance for the last three years, and a committee of the American Historical Association is co-operating with the English committee.

The directors of the Old South Work in Boston, U.S.A., improve this notable millennial occasion by adding to their valuable series of Old South Leaflets two leaflets illustrating the historical writings of King Alfred. Perhaps the most valuable of these was the description of Europe which he inserted in his translation of Orosius. This description of Europe by Alfred is published as Old South Leaflet No. 112, and with it is published, as Leaflet No. 113, the account of Augustine in England, from Alfred's translation of the Venerable Bede's Ecclesiastical History of the English Nation. Both leaflets are accompanied by careful historical and bibliographical notes; and, furnished as they are for the mere cost of printing, five cents a copy, they should do much to rouse new interest in Alfred in this millennial year. It is well that such interest should be roused. 'Alfred,' said Freeman, 'is the most perfect character in history.'

In consequence of a flaw in the casting of Mr. Thornycroft's great statue of King Alfred, and some improvement to the granite monolith having been found necessary, it will be impossible for the celebration to take place in July as intended. It is probable that the celebration will be held in September, unless any unforeseen accident occurs. The subscriptions recently received include £100 from the University of Pennsylvania.

THE RUSKIN MEMORIAL CROSS.

An elaborate description has just been published of the monument now in course of preparation for the burial-place of John Ruskin in Coniston churchyard, from a design by Mr. W. G. Collingwood. The monument is a tall cross of the type lately revived from ancient models of the age before the Norman Conquest. The cross is of the hard green stone of the neighbourhood, supplied from the quarries of Tiberthwaite, not easy to carve, but likely to last practically for ever, and not liable to chip or lose its pleasant grey-green colour. It is slender and tall, but standing not more than 9ft. from the ground. The base is cut into the three Calvary steps, as they are called, usual in such monuments. On the side facing the grave and looking east is a figure with a lyre, representing Mr. Ruskin's earliest works, poems, and the poetry of architecture. Above this, in a panel of the interlaced work so often seen in such crosses, is his name and the dates 1819-1900, the only lettering thought necessary, for all the rest of the story is told in pictures. Over the name is the figure of an artist sketching, with the pines, about which Mr. Ruskin wrote with such enthusiasm, and the range of Mont Blanc slightly indicated, and the rising sun, which was his device on the cover of the first great work, 'Modern Painters.' Above is the Lion of St. Mark, for his 'Stones of Venice,' and the Candlestick of the Tabernacle for 'Seven Lamps.' The south side is filled with a scroll of his favourite wild rose in bud, blossom, and fruit, and on the boughs three of the creatures he wrote about with affection in 'Love's Meinie' and elsewhere, the squirrel and the robin and the kingfisher. This is meant to symbolise his interest in natural history. The west side, looking towards the mountains, represents his ethical and social teaching. At the bottom is the parable of the workmen in the vineyard, receiving each his penny from the Master—'Unto this last.' Then a design of 'Sesame and Lilies,' and in the middle 'Fors Clavigera,' the Angel of Fate holding the club, key, and nail, which every reader of his work will easily recognise. Over this is the 'Crown of Wild Olive,' and at the top 'St. George and the Dragon.' The north side is a simple interlaced pattern. The cross-head on one side bears the globe, symbolising in those old sculptures the Sun of Righteousness, and the other side has a disc with the Fylfot, or revolving cross, accepted generally as the emblem of eternal life. The carving is purposely kept low and flat, bringing out the subjects by touches of shadow rather than in high surface relief. The work is now in the hands of Mr. Miles, sculptor, Ulverston.—Westminster Budget.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS AT LEIPZIG.

We hear that among the visitors from this country to the Leipzig Congress will be Mr. John Murray, Mr. Frederick Macmillan, Mr. Wm. Heinemann, Mr. F. J. Cross of Messrs. Cassell's, Mr. A. Nutt, Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, Mr. Gay, Mr. S. Duckworth, Mr. Spencer Blackett, Mr. Houlston, Mr. Kleinau, Mr. J. Shaylor, Mr. Soulsby (British Museum Copyright Department), Mr. T. Browne, and Mr. E. G. Fairholme.

PRESENTATION TO MR. W. C. K. CLOWES.

Additional interest was given to the Annual Conversazione of the members of The Master Printers' and Allied Trades' Association, held at Stationers' Hall on April 24, by the presentation during the evening to Mr. W. C. Knight Clowes of some handsome antique plate as a mark of regard and appreciation of his voluntary services.

In formally making the presentation Mr. Henry Good (Chairman of the Association) said he felt it a great honour to have been deputed to perform the duty on behalf of the Association. He said that Mr. Clowes's record was probably well known to most present, but, for the sake of any who were not acquainted with it, he described how Mr. Clowes, with the co-operation of others, had helped to found the Association, had become its first Chairman, and fixed the lines on which its future proceedings should be conducted. Shortly after the formation of the Association, its usefulness was proved in negotiations with the L.S.C. and the Printing Machine Managers, in both of which Mr. Clowes did valuable work, and earned the respect of those on both sides of the table. Although refraining from active participation in the work of the Association for some time owing to impaired health, Mr. Clowes, with the true instinct of the war horse, directly trouble of the first magnitude appeared on the horizon, again came forward and devoted his exceptional knowledge and valuable experience to the interests of the Association. He attended the many meetings of the Committee, and when a Special Committee was appointed kindly acceded to Mr. Henry Good's personal request that he would act as its chairman. Mr. Clowes materially assisted in preparing the case for the Association, attended the sittings of the Arbitration Court, and generally, by his great experience and geniality, largely contributed to a peaceful issue. In conclusion, he expressed the hope, on behalf of the Association and himself, that Mr. Clowes might be spared for many years, not only to the great benefit of his family and friends, but also for the advantage of the Association, expressing confidence that, should any fresh troubles unfortunately arise, Mr. Clowes would be as willing then as in the past to render his valuable assistance.

In reply, Mr. Clowes said: 'Gentlemen,—The more than kind and too flattering words which Mr. Good has just spoken, and for which I heartily thank him, bring to my mind two thoughts—the first is how little I deserve this magnificent token of your goodwill—this more than handsome recognition of any little services I may have rendered you; and the other is, how difficult it is for me to find words to express how highly I appreciate, how greatly I value, with what pride I regard, the great honour you are doing me this evening. On the two occasions on which I have more particularly given much time and thought to endeavour to promote the interests of us all during a crisis in our trade, circumstances—not my own ability—have placed me in such a position as to bring me more prominently before you than my colleagues; but, I can truly say that, were it not for the loyalty, the ability, and the kindness with which they supported me, both in the 1891 Conference and in the Arbitration of this year, I should not be in the proud position I find myself to-day. I am very glad to have this opportunity of testifying to their support, and of warmly thanking them for it. I should like to bring to your mind who those colleagues were. My colleagues in 1891 were Messrs. Waterlow, Burt, Harrison, McCorquodale, Wilson, and Catling. In the Arbitration this year Mr. Catling was the only one of the above who did not again assist. I may say he was out of England. The additions were Messrs. Walter Hazell, Alderman Truscott, W. J. Tull, and E. A. Clowes. This is no ordinary honour you are conferring upon me. I know of nothing that a man can more wish for from the members of his own trade than such a proof of regard and friendship as this occasion shows. I have ventured to bring two of my boys with me this evening, so that, if it falls to the lot of either or both of them to come to our business, they may carry away with them a life-long recollection of this most important and interesting event in my life, and of your goodness and kindness towards me. I also intend to leave this beautiful service of plate as an heirloom, to remind my family what you have done for me. Without exaggeration I can assure you this is one of the proudest moments of my life, and one which I shall never forget.

Gentlemen, from the bottom of my heart, I thank you all.'

The presentation took the form which it was believed would be most agreeable—old plate being selected, consisting of

A very fine George III. silver gilt two-handle dessert dish, of 1768, made by Richard Rugg at St. John's Square, near the gate, with two smaller ones (matching), made to complete the set in 1800 and 1802.

Also a magnificent silver urn, designed by Flaxman—George III., of 1761, fluted, pierced and chased, and surmounted by lion figure, made by Francis Waysmith, at King's Arms Court, near the Bank.

The balance subscribed has been spent in a beautifully illuminated address and in useful table silver, i.e. fish and dessert knives &c.

however inadequately, their appreciation of the valuable services you have so freely given to the trades as the first Chairman of the Association, and whenever it has since been necessary to render assistance. They therefore desire your acceptance of the accompanying pieces of plate, for which they have subscribed, and trust that you may long be spared to enjoy their use.

IN MEMORIAM.

We much regret to learn of the death, at the early age of thirty-five, of Signor Emilio Prass, the well-known bookseller and publisher of Naples, which took place on May 21.

TRADE CHANGE.

The publishing business of Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Ltd., now carried on at 26 Ivy Lane, will, on June 5, be removed to more convenient premises at 13 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. Ivy Lane has been the address of the house for nearly eighty years, from the time when Mr. George Virtue first started as a publisher of subscription books.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'The Journal of Mrs. Fenton, 1826-1830, with a Preface by Sir Henry Lawrence, Bart.' Although the period covered by Mrs. Fenton's Journal was not crowded with startling occurrences, there is no lack of interest in this narrative of her life in India, the Mauritius, and Australia. The writer's maiden name was Elizabeth Knox; her father was rector of Lifford, and afterwards of Innismag Rath, co. Leitrim, Ireland. In 1826 Elizabeth Knox married Captain Niel Campbell, and accompanied him to India, where their wedded life was terminated by the captain's death within a year. In May 1828, the widowed lady was united to Captain Fenton in Calcutta Cathedral, and her husband subsequently made up his mind to sell his commission and settle in Tasmania. On their way thither Mrs. Fenton stayed some months at Mauritius. The volume is divided into three parts: the first and longest relates the writer's stay in India; the second treats of her nine months' residence in Mauritius; and the third part tells the experiences of her husband and herself in Tasmania. In his preface Sir H. W. Lawrence says: 'Mrs. Fenton's spelling has been modernised, though one parts regretfully with such words as "tygres" and "atalevents"!' He adds that one or two specimens have been given of a considerable number of verses written by her. 'It was atalevents a very harmless amusement,' Mrs. Fenton herself characteristically observed, 'though not a very profitable one—at least so I have tried to convince myself when half ashamed of the propensity.'

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'The Good Red Earth,' by Eden Phillpotts. Mr. Phillpotts may always be trusted to spin a story that in its types of eccentric character and human attributes shall prove interesting, and in 'The Good Red Earth' he has well sustained his reputation.

From the Art and Book Company.—'The Scale of Perfection,' by Walter Hilton. With 'An Essay on the Spiritual Life of Mediæval

England' by the Rev. J. B. Dalgairns, Priest of the Oratory. The Art and Book Company have done well to produce this beautiful edition of a beautiful work, written long before the invention of printing from movable metal types; for Walter Hilton, the author of it, and Canon of Thurgarton, in Notts, died at that place in 1395. The earliest printed editions are that of 'Wynkyn de Worde,' published in 1494, and that of Pynson in 1506. A Publishers' Note, prefixed to the handsome volume before us, states that the text used is that of the edition published by Dom Serenus Cressy, O.S.B., in 1659, the title-page of which claims that 'by the changing of some antiquated words it is rendered more intelligible.' Cressy's text was reprinted in 1870 with 'An Essay on the Spiritual Life of Mediæval England,' by Fr. Dalgairns, replete with most interesting information as to the spiritual life and literature of England during the Middle Ages, a subject on which few were better qualified to write than its author, who, while at Littlemore, thirty years earlier, had indited 'Lives of the Early English Saints.' This remarkable essay adds to the intrinsic value of a work which lovers of ascetic literature of all denominations should possess.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The Rise of Hellas' ('Historical Greek Readers'), by E. G. Wilkinson, M.A. We regret to learn from a general preface to the series that Mr. Wilkinson died before this work was quite completed. It has for its aim to ensure that the translator intelligently appreciates what he is translating; and, with this object in view, the readings are accompanied by brief historical introductions, illustrations, and historical parallels similar to those used in the same publishers' series of 'Historical Latin Readers.' The advantages of the system adopted in this work are obvious, and a careful use of it should yield good results.

From the same.—'The Monastery' ('Sir Walter Scott Readers for Young People'). This is one of the series of 'Sir Walter Scott Readers for Young People.' Whatever opinion may be held as to the advisability of 'cutting' novels to fit them for juvenile readers, there can be little doubt that 'The Monastery' and its sequel, 'The Abbot,' with their supernatural machinery are of all Scott's works the least fit for such treatment.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'Glimpses of Three Nations,' by G. W. Stevens; edited by Vernon Blackburn; with preface by C. Stevens. England, France, and Germany are the three nations of which glimpses are afforded in this volume of Messrs. Blackwood's handsome Memorial Edition of George Warrington Stevens's works; and to each of these nations one of the three parts forming the volume is assigned. The first part, England, is represented by London; the second, France, by The Paris of To-day; and the third, Germany, by a graphic, if rather over-coloured, sketch of Kaiser William II., his capital and country. Of the first part, we are told by Mrs. Stevens, in an interesting preface, that it was her gifted husband's intention to write, as his magnum opus, an account of London in its various and contradictory aspects, and that the thirteen chapters here reprinted from the Daily Mail are mere suggestions of what he intended. Nevertheless, being written with the accuracy and verve characteristic of all Stevens's work, they are as true to the London of to-day as were 'Sketches by Boz' to the London of the days of William the Fourth. All three parts deserve to be read and pondered.

From Cambridge University Press.—'Livy,' Book II., edited by R. S. Conway, Litt.D. The editor of this new volume of the 'Pitt Press' series has endeavoured to meet the requirements of more than one class of students. So he deals with every point of language offering difficulties to students familiar only with one or two books of Cæsar or Virgil for whom he has written hints on the chief difficulties of Livy's style, while the wants of University students are met by adding notes on constitutional history and by giving the origin as well as the use of any idioms discussed. Indeed, he seems to have spared no pains to facilitate the study of the writings of the great historian. An edition so conscientiously executed, and which is so excellently printed at the Pitt Press, should have a wide circulation amongst those learning Latin.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited.—'The New Penny Magazine,' Volume 10. The most noticeable feature of this magazine, the numbers of which are now gathered together to form the usual quarterly volume, is its excellent variety. Every class of reader is apparently catered for, and whether the inclination runs to politics, music, theatricals, society doings, philanthropy, travel, warfare, fiction, cookery, trained animals, conjuring, humour, or a hundred and one other subjects, it is equally well looked after. In the matter of illustrations the magazine is particularly well endowed, and included among them are a large number of portraits. The man or woman who can find nothing of attractive interest in these pages must be hopeless indeed.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'The White Cottage,' by Zack. The readers—and that implies the admirers—of Zack's writings, who have watched the progressive development of her power as a storyteller and analyst of character, will find their most favourable anticipations as to her future more than realised in this new romance. Very impressive is the weird picture with which the story opens: The fishing village of Bere-Upton in the sunset of a dull November day. Then appears on the scene the boat of the young fisherman, Mark Tavy, who is drawing in his lines while gazing at The White Cottage which he means to rent 'when me and Luce be man and wife.' Falling into a reverie, he mutters: "The Bible says that the man who holds by the Almighty, the Almighty will hold by him. Well, I have led a clean life an' acted fair. The devil ain't never bested me yet; and, what's more, he never shall." A curious muffled sound like a subdued laugh echoed across the water as the wind dropped round a point more east. Mark glanced about him uneasily. With such an ominous beginning no happy ending can be looked for; but the reader's attention is at once enlisted in the tragic story of Mark Tavy's courtship of Luce Myrtle, in which Mark is always forestalled by Ben Lupin, the marplot of the tale. Admirably as the story is told the characters are drawn with like skill. Poor Luce Myrtle, beautiful and gentle, but half-hearted in her affection for Mark, and fascinated by Ben while afraid of him; Luce's parents; Mrs. Myrtle, proud of her rich yeoman blood, who had yet condescended to marry John Myrtle, 'born between parish sheets'; Mark's sister; the widow Flutter and her two lovers, big sleepy Constable Garge and the little Postman, Septimus Spong. Some richly comic scenes and quaint samples of rustic wit and wisdom give a pleasant relief to this tragedy of 'The White Cottage' than which we have read few better stories for many a long day.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Benenden Letters: London, Country, and Abroad, 1753-1821,' edited by Charles Frederic Hardy. It is not claimed for these letters that they are of great value to the historian or antiquary, or that they throw any particularly interesting side-lights upon the events or manners of the period. As the editor somewhat humorously remarks, 'those who best know the literature of the subject are probably convinced that, whether by means of front-lights or back-lights, sky-lights, foot-lights, or side-lights, the Georgian era has been pretty sufficiently exposed to view already, and that even if some sort of a literary X-ray were brought into use its transparencies would reveal little or nothing of consequence which was not known before.' The attraction of the letters, on the contrary, lies in their natural merits, the ease and aptitude with which they are written, and the many sketches of character that abound in their pages. Underlying the whole is a sense of reality, of broad humanity, that should excite the interest of most readers and make them feel in close sympathy with the writers. The editor, in order that nothing may be lost, has been at great pains to supply explanations of the references to events and personages, whether public or private; and too much praise can scarcely be awarded him for the industry he has shown in this direction. Each batch of letters is prefaced by an introduction giving such information in regard to the writer as may be necessary for a right comprehension of his correspondence. There are also numerous footnotes and a good index.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'A Daring Spirit,' by Mrs. Bagot Harte. Sensational incidents alone will not make a good novel, and in Mrs. Harte's treatment of her subject there is a great want of distinction. None of the characters are particularly interesting—not even the boy whose daring spirit is the means of clearing up a murder mystery; and some of the writing is very crude indeed. The picture of a strong-minded old maid, firm in her advocacy of the superiority of women over men, is evidently intended to be telling, but succeeds only in becoming exceedingly wearisome; in fact, no reader can have the slightest regret when she is murdered. Mrs. Harte can do better than this.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Mr. John Burns, M.P.,' by G. H. Knott, M.A. Many readers will no doubt be glad to have these particulars relating to the career of our leading working men's representative in this country, and we are not so sure but that Mr. Burns himself will be interested in the pages of this latest addition to the 'Bijou Biographies' series. But is it not advancing a little too quickly to imagine Mr. Burns the future leader of the Radical party? The chief obstacle in the way, according to Mr. Knott, is the want of appreciation shown in him by his own class.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'The Revolt' and 'The Escape,' by Villiers de l'Isle Adam, translated from the French by Theresa Barclay. Readers who are interested in the drama will, we are sure, be very glad to have this capital translation of two highly remarkable plays. Villiers de l'Isle Adam was a thorough Bohemian, and through want of attention to the business or common-sense side of life never attained the position to which his powers entitled him, but his work is distinguished by a knowledge of life and perception of dramatic contrast which in the opinion of many critics renders him little inferior to Ibsen.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'Shots from a Lawyer's Gun,' by Nicholas Everitt. This is a volume that will for many reasons prove highly interesting to sportsmen. The dry facts of law in regard to the killing and preservation of wild birds and animals are here conveyed in such an agreeable form that they lose half of their dustiness. It is certainly not everyone who can happily blend instruction and entertainment, but the author has made a very successful attempt at the difficulty. All who are fond of shooting and interested in the laws relating to game should find this volume very enjoyable reading.

From Messrs. Gall & Inglis.—'The "Contour" Road Book of England: a series of Elevation Plans of the Roads, with measurements and descriptive letterpress,' by Harry R. G. Inglis. We have before frequently had occasion to refer to the excellent guides and maps for cyclists published by this firm, and the present volume is one of those expertly arranged books conveying a maximum of information within a minimum of space which no exponent of the wheel can afford to be without. Our only objection is that it is even yet a little too bulky to carry about during a bicycle tour; but this disadvantage, we believe, has been obviated by the publication of an India paper edition which we have not received. To mention all the invaluable contents of this closely packed volume would be impossible in the space at our command. It must be enough to state that it supplies some fifteen hundred profile plans by which the cyclist is enabled to obtain beforehand exact information as to the character of the road, the hills to be climbed, the distance from town to town or village, hotels, &c. We understand the volume is also published in three parts, respectively dealing with the Northern Division of England, the South-East Division, and the West Division. This to a large extent does away with our previous objection of bulk. We have also received from Messrs. Gale & Inglis 'The "Royal" Road Book of England, with Three Hundred Contour Maps,' and 'The "Safety" Cycling Map of England for the South-Eastern Division,' both of which are publications that call for high praise on account of their general preparation and practical usefulness.

From Messrs. Greening & Co. Limited.—'The Messiahship of Shakespeare,' sung and expounded by Clelia (Charles Downing).—In his preface the author of this work says: 'To develop and reconstruct Christianity in the light of the Reformation and Renaissance, this about the year 1598, I infer from all the evidence, became the great purpose and life-work of Shakespeare; to be achieved, first, by living the developed life himself, for our example; secondly, by certain symbolical works, namely "The Sonnets," already largely composed and ready to his shaping hand, and those which subsequently took form as 'The Tempest,' "Winter's Tale," and "Cymbeline." These were to veil, till the fulness of the time, his pregnant ideas of the Development and Reconstruction, together with himself as the necessary central figure, and Messianic Personality of the scheme.' The author has evidently devoted much time and research to the elucidation of his theory, and sends it forth with a dedication to a fit critic versed in the literature of the last century.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Idylls of the Fells,' by J. T. Kingsley Tarpey. The writer of these pleasantly-written sympathetic stories is a painter who in each and all of them shows an innate love of the true and beautiful in nature and human nature. They are so short, and it may be added, without any desire to be alliterative, so sweet, that it would be unfair to give any analysis of them. Nevertheless we must mention, as especially attractive, 'The Girl at the Gate,' who was always so stupid, and was so unselfishly rescued from the consequences of her own stupidity and another's selfishness, by the kind-hearted 'china man,' 'The Christ-child at Fiddler's Hole,' who might have been the humble instrument in reclaiming the drunken labourers at the waterworks had it not been for a vicar's narrow-mindedness; and the pathetic story of the poor old sheep dog, Yarra, who was one mouth too many to feed all through the winter, but who was not made away with after all. These are really delightful stories, the reading of which is calculated to make the reader wiser and better. A very characteristic picture of local scenery, 'The Cottage on the Fell,' from a painting by the author, forms a very effective frontispiece to this attractive little volume.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—The May number of Good Housekeeping contains among an excellent assortment of contributions appropriate to its title specially seasonable papers on Ices, Salads, Different Methods of Preparing Strawberries, &c. The general articles include 'A Critical Survey of Home Handicraft,' by Gertrude S. Trowbridge; 'Hints on Housekeeping,' by Octave Thanet; 'Economy, Hygiene, and Comfort at Table,' by Mary S. Holbrook; and various short papers treating of such interesting and useful subjects as gown designs, furniture arrangement, a compact kitchen, economical dishes, tea cosies, &c. The magazine well maintains its reputation as a most instructive adviser in matters of household management.

From the same.—'The Lover's Replies to an Englishwoman's Love Letters.' The extremely dainty binding of this volume is in admirable keeping with the character of its contents. More dexterous specimens of the art of polite writing could scarcely be wished for. It will be remembered that in 'An Englishwoman's Love Letters' certain 'short notes, not above twenty in all,' were omitted, and in the present volume not a little of the interest, to say nothing of humour, arises from the answers to these being included. There are many features in the lover's correspondence as now given that will provoke the reader to quiet merriment. The tendency to ultra-refinement, as when the lover points out to the fond one that her last letter was insufficiently fastened, 'the wretched mucilage having given way'; the gift of half a ton of note paper, with a consignment of pens and sealing wax, and some thousands of envelopes, so that there may be no excuse for her not writing through lack of stationery; the perpetual references in his letters to his mother and her opinions, which would wear out the patience of any girl, and the want of tact generally shown in his confidences—all these form excellent subjects for gentle laughter to any who can read between the lines. And the conclusion eventually arrived at that the Englishwoman is out of her mind is delicious. As an example of delicate fooling the volume deserves all praise, and many an old cynic, we may be sure, will slyly chuckle over its pages, while the young and romantic-minded will be attracted by other and equally enjoyable features.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'The Statesman's Year-Book: Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1901,' edited by J. Scott Keltie, LL.D., with the assistance of I. P. A. Renwick, M.A., LL.B. We should say that this issue of the 'Statesman's Year-Book' had in the value and interest of its contents surpassed any of its many predecessors were it not that wellnigh perfect accuracy and completeness had come to be the recognised characteristics of this annual several years ago. Considerable alterations, however, have been necessitated in the present volume by the events of the past year. For the first time in the history of the Year-Book, a change has to be made in the name of the Sovereign of the British Empire. The Transvaal and the Orange Free State have had to be transferred from their old independent position to the section devoted to the British Empire. In Australia the Federation so long aimed at has at length been accomplished, and the book treats in this direction, so far as statistics have been available, of an Australian Commonwealth. During 1900 and 1901 new censuses have been taken in the United States, Germany, France, Italy, Denmark, Austria-Hungary, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, and the British Empire. The results of these are for the most part found in the present edition, many of them having apparently been included at the last moment. The section on Russia has manifestly received a complete overhauling and has been greatly improved, while necessary alterations have been effected in other directions. For reasons already stated, we cannot say the volume is now better than any of its previous editions, but it certainly remains one of the most explanatory, useful, and reliable annuals that we know of. Special attention, we should add, has been paid to the maps.

From the same.—'Palgrave's Golden Treasury of English Songs and Lyrics, Book Fourth,' edited, with Notes, by J. H. Fowler, M.A. The reputation of the late Francis Turner Palgrave's admirable anthology is by this time so securely established that it was only right and proper it should be annotated for the use of school and college students. This by no means trivial task Mr. Fowler has most thoroughly and satisfactorily performed in the edition of the Fourth Book lying before us. Of the utility of such an edition there can be no doubt, and of its get up we can affirm that the publishers have produced such a dainty volume as no schoolboy of our boyhood's days ever possessed.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Prince Rupert the Buccaneer,' by C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne. This is such a story of adventure as might have had for its author that many-sided writer Daniel Defoe himself. The initial chapter shows us a room in the house of the Governor of Tortuga where the brave admiral and general, Prince Rupert, is seated at table with Monsieur d'Ogeron, the Governor: which worthy, having little respect for his own government in far-off France, is a patron of the terrible Buccaneers. Prince Rupert has under his orders three ships entrusted to him as near kinsman and loyal servitor of King Charles II., at the time an exile holding his Court at the Hague. The object of discussion between Prince and Governor is the present hard lot and dubious prospects of certain Malignants who had recently been consigned by the English Commonwealth authorities to Monsieur d'Ogeron for sale. As these poor fellows had served under him in the Civil War the Prince wishes to ransom the officers even if he cannot free the men. The Governor wishes the Prince to seize upon one of the neighbouring islands, occupy it, and join him in forming a Buccaneer kingdom and organising filibustering expeditions. This proposition Prince Rupert's loyalty forbids him to accept. However, being firmly resolved to rescue his officers from their harsh servitude, he at last agrees to pawn his fleet to the Governor for six months, and meanwhile to become his unwilling guest. The Prince has with him a mysterious secretary, 'whom he knew as Stephen Laughan (but who was a maid disguised in man's attire),' and the surroundings at Tortuga are so very unpleasant, especially to 'Master Laughan,' that, after an orgie at the Governor's castle the Prince determines to leave the place, bargaining with M. d'Ogeron to let him have a canoe and victuals, and for permission to take with him his secretary, whom the Governor flatly declares is a woman, as his personal attendant on a trip to the island of Hispaniola. Now begins a series of adventures which must be followed in the author's exciting narrative, or rather in that of Master Stephen Laughan, who is supposed to be the chronicler of this sensational expedition.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Life and Letters of Gilbert White, of Selborne,' written and edited by his great-grand-nephew, Rashleigh Holt-White. 2 vols. Few books have achieved such a wide reputation as White's 'History of Selborne,' and it is but fitting that an official life of the author should be written, even after the lapse of so many years. Family reasons, too, seem to have had some weight in determining this course, for so many misleading and erroneous statements were constantly appearing in the press that his relatives naturally desired that their distinguished ancestor should appear in his true colours, and not as depicted by writers who had only their own imaginations to work upon. Granting, however, that an authoritative life was called for, we doubt whether it was wise to extend it to two large volumes. Much of the matter might either have been condensed or altogether omitted, with advantage, we think, to the interest of the work; and in one volume the account of the naturalist's career would have read closer and possessed a more continuous hold on the reader. The superfluous matter chiefly relates to the White family. But when we come to dive deeper into the work, though the want of the pruning knife is still apparent, we lose sight of this in the genuine pleasure of learning something of Gilbert White's real life and inner personality. Perhaps this is all the more powerfully reflected by reason of the close attention which is devoted to family matters. A man like White shows himself in his brightest and truest colours amid the surroundings of home life and in his association with his relatives. The letters are charming; just such simple, kindly (and yet withal humorous) epistles as one would imagine he would write, and especially interesting when they refer to questions of natural history. A mass of correspondence is given from his old college friend, John Mulso, and this contributes in no slight degree to a knowledge of White's individuality. Mulso had a sincere attachment and regard for him, and in many ways, as Mr. Holt-White points out, he acted the part of a veritable Boswell. It would be quite impossible to indicate all the leading features of this delightful work, but we hope admirers of 'The Natural History of Selborne' will procure the book, and learn the interesting details of the author's career for themselves. Each volume contains a number of illustrations, among the more prominent being views of 'The Wakes,' Selborne, where Gilbert White lived, the church and Vicarage at Selborne, and the Hermitage. There are also several portraits of different members of the White family. Gilbert White himself seems to have had a rooted objection to sit for his picture, and an impression of his appearance can only be gathered from the descriptions of his friends. On the publisher's part no pains have evidently been spared to make these volumes thoroughly attractive and pleasant to handle.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'Twixt Devil and Deep Sea,' by Mrs. C. N. Williamson.

It is Sheila Cope's first visit to a London theatre, the Lyceum; the piece is 'The Bells,' and she is spell-bound at the play and the acting of Sir Henry Irving. 'Isn't he glorious?' she says, appealing to her mother, Lady Cope. Glancing quickly round, she sees that her mother has not heard her, and has a strange blank look in her eyes. On being asked if she is well, Lady Cope answers in the affirmative, but adds that the actor's make-up in the character of Mathias reminds her of a man the thought of whom disturbs her. Sheila is a pretty girl, and the observed of all observers. Two observers are particularly noticeable. One of these is a young man distinguished in appearance, but not handsome; the other is a woman dressed in black satin, with large eyes deep set, yellow and luminous as a cat's, which are fixed alternately on Sheila and Lady Cope. She evidently wishes to attract their attention, and at last turns her right arm round so as to show between the elbow and the wrist a purple patch shaped like a heart. On seeing this, Lady Cope, whose own arm bears a similar mark, rises from her chair, and, dragging her daughter after her, says she must see this woman. They all three leave the theatre. Lady Cope gets into a cab with the mysterious lady in black, and orders Sheila to return to their hotel. But the girl tells her own cabman to follow the cab containing the two ladies. This he does for some time without success. At last he will go no farther. Sheila has to alight, and, after paying the cabman, is attacked by a footpad, but rescued by the young man she had seen in the theatre, who insists on her taking his cab to her hotel. Her mother returns very late and quite exhausted. The right sleeve of her dress has been torn from wrist to shoulder and the heart-shaped mark has disappeared. Lady Cope does not rally, and after saying to Sheila, 'You must find—the west wing'—passes away. After the funeral, at the family place in Dorsetshire, Sheila resolves to visit the west wing of the old house by night, but is disturbed in her search by mysterious noises and apparitions. Next day her cousin, Sir Roger Cope, calls and tells her that she is only the adopted daughter of Lady Cope, who has left no will in her favour. But, although penniless, he loves her, and asks her to marry him. This proposal she declines. He then sets to work to get her into his power. What success attends his scheme and what is the meaning of the purple mark must be read in the pages of this well-told tale.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Four Great Venetians: an Account of the Lives and Works of Giorgione, Titian, Tintoretto, and Il Veronese,' by Frank Preston Stearns. Surely no one can say that painting does not occupy a large share of the public attention nowadays, and when criticism of the old masters meets with such cordial acceptance at the hands of readers it is certainly a happy augury of the art education of the nation. Mr. Stearns enters very thoroughly into the merits of the four Venetian painters named, and describes in detail their chief works. Some half-dozen illustrations are also given. The volume exhibits the author's intimate acquaintance with his subject, and he possesses a knowledge of the Venetian school of painters that renders his treatise extremely interesting and instructive reading.

From the same.—'William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and the Growth and Division of the British Empire, 1703-1778,' by Walford Davis Green, M.P. There is, the author of this volume in his preface points out, no good biography of Lord Chatham, the works in existence being of a fragmentary and erratic description; and it is to repair this omission that the present issue of the 'Heroes of the Nations' series has been undertaken. That Mr. Green has devoted much care and unremitting industry to his task is very apparent, and the result is a volume of which he may reasonably feel proud. The political career of Pitt is closely followed from the time of his memorable maiden speech in Parliament, on the occasion of the Prince of Wales' marriage, for which he was dismissed from his cornetcy. But it was impossible to coerce such a nature into obscurity, and even Sir Robert Walpole, it is said, early recognised the talents of the young aspirant for Government office. That he possessed great personal influence is shown on Lord Cobham's testimony. 'You don't know Mr. Pitt's talent of insinuation,' he once said; 'in a very short quarter of an hour he can persuade any man of anything.' Such a man was bound to rise, and steadily he did so, even at a period which boasted such political luminaries as Sir Robert Walpole, Carteret, Pulteney, the Duke of Newcastle, Henry Pelham, and Horace Walpole. It was in 1756 that Pitt first attained office, being in that year appointed Secretary of State; but he was dismissed only a few months later, and reinstated with the additional honour of Leader of the House of Commons in 1757. At this time matters between France and England, both in Canada and India, were very much strained, and there is no more interesting part of Mr. Green's book than that which refers to Pitt's War Ministry, which lasted from 1757 to 1761. Succeeding chapters are devoted to the great minister's attitude in regard to 'The Peace of Paris,' 'The Repeal of the Stamp Act,' 'The Chatham Ministry,' and his later American policy, while at the conclusion some attempt is made to sum up Pitt's personality and historical position. The volume is graced with numerous portraits of celebrated men of the time, and in every way forms a notable addition to the many capable biographies issued by Messrs. Putnam's Sons in the same series.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Seal of Silence,' by Arthur R. Conder. A melancholy interest attaches to this novel, since it is the first and last book written by the author, Mr. Conder dying before he had corrected the final proofs for press. In a very delicately written preface from another hand some account is given of the circumstances under which the story was written, and it is impossible not to be touched by the picture of the young novelist—he was barely twenty-five—so ardently working at his literary production, meeting with acceptance from the first publisher to whom it was offered, and then, just when success had crowned his efforts and his highest hopes were about to be realised, being unexpectedly stricken down. These feelings of regret are intensified when we come to read his work. Without exactly realising the anticipations, judged by a high standard, of the opening chapters, it may be said to be an exceptionally clever book, full of promise, observation of life, and quiet humour. It is easy now, of course, to detect signs that the writer was old for his years. What especially strikes the critic is the selection of a middle-aged man for the prominent romantic rôle of the story; the sympathies of the young are usually with the young, and the elderly seem to them so far advanced along the road of life. But indeed all the characters of Mr. Conder's novel may be said to show this same maturity of thought. Winifred Wemyss, the heroine, is a girl in years but a woman in reflection; the naturally young people of the narrative, such as Bobby Magerrison and Bess Mortimer, are almost treated as children. And yet the author's description of the Oxford reading party shows that he has plenty of sympathy for youthful frivolity. We shall not attempt an outline of the story, preferring to leave to the reader the keen enjoyment of investigating the book for himself. He will, we are sure, be greatly interested in the eccentricities of 'Curly' Cloud (somehow he seems to remind us of 'Sloppy' in 'Our Mutual Friend,' though we doubt whether any real resemblance exists); the strategy of the worthy Mr. Robjohns; the over-sensitive rectitude of Wilfred Rutherford; and the staunch, lovable nature of Winifred Wemyss. A delightful mystery is exploited throughout the plot, such a mystery as Dickens was so fond of providing for his readers. In short the book is one to be heartily and thoroughly enjoyed.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Wisdom of Esau,' by R. L. Outhwaite and C. H. Chomley. We are taken in this story to Victoria, there to be introduced to a squatter's life and to mingle among a varied but mostly rough class of character. It is an honest, straightforward piece of work, which, though deficient in constructive skill and finesse, has many good points to recommend it. The period at which the narrative opens is just after the passing of the Gavan Duffy Land Act, and we have a splendid instance set before us of how the law may be evaded by men who are rich enough and sufficiently unscrupulous to utilise their opportunities. Nominally the whole of Thomas Harlin's Kumbaria estate is put up for selection by prospective settlers, but practically, by a system of bogus applicants, the best part of the run is reserved to the old proprietor. John Toland is a man of splendid physique and obstinate determination, who deeply resents the injustice shown to the squatters. By his fearless and outspoken attitude on the day of the ballot he incurs the dislike of Mallock, the ruffianly proprietor of the 'Morning Star Hotel,' as the drinking shanty of the locality is grandiloquently called; and from the first this man is the evil influence of his life. Without entering into any details, it may be said that the story is rich in stirring incidents, though a more experienced hand would probably have introduced greater light and shade, and at times there is a dangerous descent into the commonplace. The narrative affords a very vivid impression of a squatter's life in Australia, its advantages and drawbacks.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'Pro Patria,' by Max Pemberton. Captain Alfred Hilliard, of the British Army, driving his motor-car from Calais towards Boulogne, and having with him his old friend the Rev. Harry Fordham, meets in the village of Wimille a mounted Frenchman, whose horse, unused to automobiles, throws his rider before the machine can be stopped. The occupants of the car offer assistance and apologies, but the equestrian rebuffs both and rides off. Now, Hilliard is staying at the unattractive town of Calais, because an old French Colonel, Lepeletier, whose acquaintance he has recently made at Pau, is residing there with his daughter Agnes, of whom Alfred is enamoured. Lepeletier is acting as government surveyor of some mysterious mining works at Escalles. Hilliard and Fordham are on excellent terms with the Colonel, and are to dine with him that very day, when the Captain resolves to demand the Colonel's consent to receive him as Agnes's lover. On the Colonel entering the drawing-room before dinner he is accompanied by the person whose horse shied at the motor-car, and who is introduced as M. Sadi Martel, a great French engineer, but is at once recognised by Hilliard as a fellow pupil at a crammer's when preparing for an examination at the Military Academy, Woolwich, sixteen years before, when the said pupil, Robert Jeffery, was plucked. At his interview with the Colonel that officer tells Hilliard that his continual stay at Calais is not desired, and that he must abandon all hopes of Agnes. Although vexed, Hilliard promises to start for London in three days. On returning to his hotel he finds M. Sadi Martel, who owns to being the Captain's fellow-student, Robert Jeffery, but exhibits decidedly hostile feelings towards his native land and countrymen. He asks Hilliard if he would like to see the Colonel's coalpits at Escalles; and although the Captain says he is not curious about them, Jeffery offers to take him over the works. Soon after this the Captain is touring one day on his motor-car when he sees Jeffery standing at the gate of the works who invites him to enter. He does so, and the gate is instantly bolted and barred behind them. The mining operations turn out to be the making of a tunnel under the Channel for the invasion of England. Jeffery had entrapped Hilliard, and never meant him to leave the tunnel. Whether the Captain escapes death and what is the outcome of the invasion scheme are questions which cannot be answered here, but in Max Pemberton's exciting romance.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Cassell & Co. have published a new edition (the ninth) of 'The North-West Passage by Land: being the Narrative of an Expedition from the Atlantic to the Pacific undertaken with the view of Exploring a Route across the Continent to British Columbia through British Territory by one of the Northern Passes in the Rocky Mountains,' by Viscount Milton, M.P., and W. B. Cheadle, M.D. This book was first published in 1865, and at once attained a great success, running through eight editions in the next ten years. It is now issued in a cheaper form, and should again make a successful bid for popular favour.—In the new issue of the 'Minerva Library,' tastefully bound and well printed, Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have published the 'Biographical, Critical, and Miscellaneous Essays and Poetical Works of Lord Macaulay.'—The Rev. E. C. Dawson's 'Lion-hearted, the Story of Bishop Hannington's Life told for Boys and Girls,' has now reached a ninth thousand. The publishers are Messrs. Seeley & Co., who may be complimented on the neat production of the volume. It is well illustrated.—'Sant' Ilario,' one of the best of Mr. Marion Crawford's novels, forms the latest addition to the new and uniform edition of that author's works which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing.—A new edition of Mr. William Robson's 'James Chalmers, Missionary and Explorer of Rarotonga and New Guinea,' with an additional chapter by Mr. Frank B. Broad, of the London Missionary Society, has been published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—The eleventh annual edition of 'America Abroad,' edited by J. W. Cundall, presents much the same features as its predecessors, and from the mass of closely printed matter American travellers will no doubt be able to sift much information that will be useful to them. Messrs. Greening & Co. are the publishers.—Messrs. Methuen & Co. have added to their Sixpenny Library a new issue of Jane H. Findlater's pathetic story, 'The Green Graves of Balgowrie,' which, having already passed through four editions at six shillings, is likely to attain a very large circulation in its new and more accessible form.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimètres.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland .. 8s. 6d.

„ Six Months ditto ditto .. 4s. 6d.

„ Three Months ditto ditto .. 2s. 6d.

To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage 11s. 0d.

IV. SAMUEL RICHARDSON—1689-1761. Portrait.
V. THOMAS GENT—1691-1778. Portrait.
VI. ALICE GUY (wife of Thomas Gent).
VII. WILLIAM HUTTON—1723-1815. Portrait.
VIII. JAMES LACKINGTON—1746-1815. Portrait.

'Mr. Edward Marston, the well-known publisher and angler, has been induced to bring together and issue in a pretty little volume (S. Low & Co.) the "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days" which he wrote originally for the Publishers' Circular. By so doing he has laid all book lovers under a heavy but agreeable obligation.'

'These stories of the lives of Jacob Tonson, Thomas Guy, John Danton, Samuel Richardson, Thomas Gent, William Hutton, and James Lackington were all worthy of the permanence and vogue which they will secure by being obtainable in book form. The facts about Richardson are tolerably well known, but with the other booksellers named the public are not very well acquainted, and herein Mr. Marston pleasantly enlightens them. He writes an easy, genial style, and so puts his material together in appetising fashion. He supplies portraits of all his subjects, and is to be thanked for the type, paper, and binding bestowed upon the book, which is one of the daintiest ever brought out by his firm.'

LEEDS MERCURY.

'There is a pleasant literary flavour in this little volume, many picture give but almost forgotten facts, and a few portraits.'

Britain's Austral Empire

THIS publication consists of a series of drawings and portraits with appropriate letterpress.

The illustrations, reproduced by photogravure, are portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, connected with the Federal Movement.

The artist of the portraits and drawings is Mr. PERCY F. S. SPENCE, a native of Sydney, N.S.W., whose exhibits at the Royal Academy for the last two years have obtained favourable notice, and whose black-and-white work is well known, not only in his own country, but also here in Great Britain and in America. Of his paintings, two are in the National Gallery of New South Wales; while his portrait sketch of Robert Louis Stevenson was purchased by the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, London.

The letterpress, which gives in a brief outline the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, is by Mr. G. FIRTH SCOTT, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring' and other works dealing with Australia are well known.

The book consists of Forty-one Photogravures $7 \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ inches, while the Letterpress is printed on Imperial Handmade paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole is contained in a Portfolio of White Vellum and Cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. SPENCE. Only two hundred and fifty copies available in this form.

AMONG THE PORTRAITS ARE

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS AT LEIPZIG.

The most interesting event in the publishing world is undoubtedly the Congress of Publishers from all countries which is now taking place at Leipzig, and it is a matter for congratulation that this country will be represented by the President of the Publishers' Association, Mr. Frederick Macmillan, the Vice-President, Mr. John Murray, and by Mr. Wm. Heinemann, Mr. F. J. Cross of Messrs. Cassell's, Mr. A. Nutt, Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, Mr. Gay, Mr. S. Duckworth, Mr. Spencer Blackett, Mr. Houlston, Mr. Kleinau, Mr. J. Shaylor, Mr. Soulsby (British Museum Copyright Department), Mr. T. Browne, and Mr. E. G. Fairholme. That our countrymen will be well received in the great German metropolis of literature there can be no doubt whatever. Our German friends are proverbially the best of hosts, and, as will have been seen from a previous announcement in our columns, there is to be quite a round of festivities. The mere fact that Herr Albert Brockhaus is President is a guarantee that all the arrangements will leave nothing to be desired.

To-morrow, Sunday, there is to be a reception in the evening by the President; on Monday the Congress opens, and there is to be a dinner in the evening; on Tuesday a concert and reception by the Town Council; on Wednesday inspection of different publishing offices and a beer evening (Bierabend); on Thursday a banquet in the Palmengarten given by the German, Austrian, and Swiss publishers—then will our British representatives be put on their mettle to reply to their hosts—and 'Hochs' will be as thick as leaves that strow the brooks in Vallombrosa.

After the Leipzig festivities the members of the Congress are invited by the Berlin publishers and booksellers to journey to Berlin on Friday to see some of the sights of the town, and to attend a banquet, and the Berlin publishers and booksellers very considerably place themselves 'at the disposal of their visitors for Saturday.'

Altogether, what with the serious business in between, we are not at all certain that it may not be necessary to organise an expedition for the 'Quest, Rescue, and Relief' of our compatriots, lost in the depths of Germany. Our Berlin friends are accustomed to be on the Spree constantly, but no one can foretell the effect of German banquets and Bierabends on the British constitution.

We have heard it asked what is the good of these international peace and publishing and other congresses, to which we reply, See what the Berne Convention effected. Apart from the direct and indirect benefit to publishing, which may or may not be immediately apparent, there can be no doubt that these friendly meetings of publishers of all countries must do good, and can do no harm—although a cynical and unsuccessful author has been heard to remark that the principal object in publishers thus putting their heads together was to learn from each other how most successfully to rob the unfortunate author.

Next week we hope to publish some account from our Special Correspondent with the British contingent of the general proceedings of the Congress.

THE FIRST FIGHT OVER THE NET BOOK BEGINS IN AMERICA.

The first contest has started between the American Publishers' Association and the department stores, which will determine whether the 'net book' arrangement is a practicable one. R. H. Macy & Co., of New York, and Abraham & Straus, of Brooklyn, both of whom have large book departments in their stores, have refused to maintain the net price on books published by members of the American Publishers' Association.

'The Association,' said a prominent member, 'expected that such a stand would be taken by one of the big stores. So we have a test case, and if we do not win out and prove that we can cut off all supplies from any dealer behaving in this way, why, of course, our whole plan is a failure. These stores may be able to get books for a while, and even a few books for a long time, but that they can get enough to keep up a large book department is, I think, impossible. This same arrangement in regard to prices has been tried in Germany for some years, and with great success. One or two houses broke away and a few kept up the fight for some time, but in the main they were brought back into line after a short time. All reports from the West show that the plan is working well there.'

It will be seen from the report we publish on another page that there has been an unsuccessful effort by a French underseller to fight the French Publishers' Association.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In their 'Standard Library' Messrs. Methuen are about to bring out a new edition of Gilbert White's 'Natural History of Selborne,' edited with an introduction and copious notes by L. C. Miall, F.R.S., and W. Warde-Fowler, M.A., Sub-Warden of Lincoln College, Oxford.

* *

Messrs. Methuen will shortly publish a volume entitled 'Brother Musicians,' an account of the late Edward and Walter Bache, the latter well known as the champion (and for a long time the single-handed champion) of Liszt's music in England. The book includes several photographs, one hitherto unpublished letter of Liszt, and many interesting reminiscences that have come within the personal knowledge of the authoress, Miss Constance Bache.

* *

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately an important work entitled 'The Heart of the Empire: Discussions of Problems of Modern City Life in England,' with an Essay on Imperialism.

Messrs. Methuen have just published a book entitled 'Peace or War in South Africa,' by A. M. S. Methuen. Its object is to 'provide a short narrative of the events which preceded and caused the war, to give an estimate of our military position, to describe the dangers of a settlement by force, and to offer some suggestions for an honourable peace.'

Bubbles, edited by Dr. Barnardo, possesses a strong claim upon the attention of young people. A copy of the June part, just issued, is before us, and the contents may well be described as entertaining and instructive. Among the numerous chatty articles and stories the following are worthy of special mention: 'Asleep at his Post,' a tale of the days of Wellington; 'How Jack saw the Review,' 'Our National Buildings: The House of Commons'; 'Johnnie and the Timepiece'; and 'Stories from the Old and

New Testament' narrated very simply and effectively by the Rev. W. H. Finney, M.A. Poetry, Gleanings from the Four Winds, and Interesting Jottings from the strange and pathetic records of the Editor's Homes go to complete the make-up of a magazine that will appeal to the eyes and desires of all young people. Sixteen of the page illustrations are on colour.

Mrs. Egerton Eastwick—whose former novels, 'The Rubies of Rajmar' and 'The Governor's Wife,' were published under her pen-name of Pleydell North, has ready for the press a new novel 'Beyond these Voices.' 'The story is that of a girl who, brought up without any religion, finds herself planted among the members of an old Catholic family. Her questions and theirs make a record of cross-purposes which become further complicated by an affair of the heart. Experience teaches, ripens, and reconciles before this modern Pagan dies with the vision of heaven before her eyes.' The book will be published by Messrs. Burns & Oates.

**

'His Most Gracious Majesty King Edward VII.' is the title of a book by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, to be published by Mr. Grant Richards on June 18. The book will have many illustrations, for several of which special permission has been obtained.

**

Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Ltd., have a new edition of 'The Pilgrims' Way, from Winchester to Canterbury,' by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady), now in the press. The book has been reset throughout with new type, and will have an additional photograph frontispiece, after Percy Robertson.

**

Messrs. Methuen & Co. have sent us a delightful little guide to 'The Malvern Country,' by Bertram C. A. Windle, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.S.A. The illustrations are by Mr. Edmund H. New, which means that they are excellent. Although small in size, by using thin paper Messrs. Methuen get about 240 pages into a space of 6 in. by 4 in., with but half an inch in thickness, and the only objection we have heard as regards this series is that it is a great bother to cut the thin paper edges, especially when travelling. Booksellers in the Malvern country should find a ready sale for this attractive little guide.

**

'The Staff Work of the Anglo-Boer War,' by Lady Briggs, will be published on June 11 by Mr. Grant Richards. The book, which embodies some of the war letters sent to the Morning Post from South Africa, describes the rôle sustained by the non-combatant ranks of the army and the manner in which they unostentatiously contribute to British victories. Having had practical nursing experience in South Africa, Lady Briggs is of opinion that, whatever be the defects of our Army, they are due to numerical weakness rather than inefficiency. The book will be illustrated.

**

The Bookman says: 'At the commencement of the war Messrs. Dickinsons, the well-known paper manufacturers, who have a large branch in Johannesburg, shut up their establishment in that town and locked up their warehouse, intending not to re-open until the termination of the present war. They then expected to reap the benefit on account of the scarcity of stationery in the city. The Government have forestalled them, as, being hard up for these commodities, they commandeered the whole stock.'

**

The Smart Set for June opens with a $1,000 prize novelette entitled 'The Middle Course,' by Mrs. Poultney Bigelow. The story concerns itself with a beautiful London Society woman whose husband is unsympathetic and even brutal, and who becomes sensationally involved, although innocent, with a much-lionised sculptor through a jealous woman's malicious gossip.

**

Mr. F. G. Affalo, who has already written two manuals of angling, will publish through Mr. Grant Richards, on June 18, a book called 'Sea and Coast Fishing, with special reference to Fishing in Inlets and Estuaries.' The work will have 50 illustrations from drawings and photographs.

**

Mr. Edwards, of 83 High Street, Marylebone, advertises in our columns that he will give a reward of £5 to anyone who will enable him to recover some lost books.

**

Messrs. Parker & Co. will shortly publish a second edition of 'A Digit of the Moon,' a Hindoo love story translated from the original MS. by F. W. Bain, M.A.

**

'A Flower Book,' written by Eden Coybee, with pictures in colour by Nellie Benson, is a new volume of Mr. Grant Richards's 'Dumpy Books for Children,' and will be issued on June 18.

**

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. S. Combridge has purchased the book-selling and stationery business, with circulating library, at 56 Church Road, Hove. Mr. Combridge was for 16 years with Mr. D. B. Friend, of 77 Western Road, of which business that at Hove has been a branch. Mr. Friend will continue to carry on the business at Western Road, Brighton.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY'S EXHIBITION OF

DRAWINGS IN BLACK-AND-WHITE.

This Exhibition will be held this year at the Hall of the Cutlers' Company, Warwick Lane, Newgate Street, E.C. (by the kind permission of the Court of the Cutlers' Company).

The Exhibition will be open from June 11 to June 22, from 10 to 5 (Saturdays 10 to 1). Drawings will be exhibited by nearly all the principal black-and-white artists, including Messrs. J. MacWhirter, R.A., Alfred East, A.R.A., Gordon Browne, R.I., H. M. Brock, Miss Margaret Dicksee, Miss M. L. Gow, R.I., Messrs. H. M., S., and W. Paget, J. Fulleylove, R.I., Byam Shaw, R.I., W. Hatherell, R.I., Harry Payne, R. Caton Woodville, W. H. Margetson, Hal Hurst, Joseph Pennell, the late J. Gulich, R.I., P. Tarrant, W. B. Wollen, R.I., C. W. Wyllie, and many others.

A set of very clever pen-and-ink drawings by Mr. H. M. Brock, made to illustrate Thackeray's Ballads and Songs, will be on view.

A fine series of Water-Colour Drawings of the Tower of London, by Mr. H. E. Tidmarsh, will also be exhibited.

Admission will be free on presentation of private address card.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Her Majesty Queen Alexandra has graciously signified her willingness to become the Patron of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, in the place of her late Majesty Queen Victoria.

IRELAND'S FAMOUS WRITERS.

'I won't insist on the Round Towers,' smiled Salemina, 'and I think Penelope's idea a delightful one; we might add to it a sort of literary pilgrimage to the homes and haunts of Ireland's famous writers.'

'I didn't know that she had any,' interrupted Francesca.

This is a favourite method of conversation with that spoiled young person; it seems to appeal to her in three different ways; she likes to belittle herself, she likes to shock Salemina, and she likes to have information given her on the spot in some succinct, portable, convenient form.

'Oh,' she continued apologetically, 'of course there are Dean Swift and Thomas Moore and Charles Lever.'

'And,' I added, 'certain minor authors named Goldsmith, Sterne, Steele, and Samuel Lover.'

'And Bishop Berkeley, and Brinsley Sheridan, and Maria Edgeworth, and Feather Prout,' continued Salemina, 'and certain great speech-makers like Burke and Grattan and Curran; and how delightful to visit all places connected with Stella and Vanessa, and the spot where Spenser wrote the "Faerie Queene."'

'Nor own a land on earth but one,
We're Paddies, and no more.'

sang Francesca. 'You will be telling me in a moment that Thomas Carlyle was born in Skreenarinka, and that Shakespeare wrote Romeo and Juliet in Coolagarrance,' for she had drawn the guide-book towards her and made good use of it. 'Let us do the literary pilgrimage, certainly, before we leave Ireland, but suppose we begin with something less intellectual. This is the most pugnacious map I ever gazed upon. All the names seem to begin or end with kill, bally, whack, shock, or knock; no wonder the Irish make good soldiers! Suppose we start with a sanguinary trip to the Kill places, so that I can tell any timid Americans I met in travelling that I have been to Kilmacow and to Kilmacthomas, and am going to-morrow to Kilmore, and next day to Kilmaule.'"

'I think that must have been said before,' I objected.

'It is so obvious that it's not unlikely,' she rejoined; 'then let us simply agree to go afterwards to see all the Bally places from Ballydehob on the south to Ballycastle or Ballymoney on the north, and from Ballynahinch or Ballywilliam on the east to Ballyvaughan or Ballybunnion on the west. Don't they all sound jolly and grotesque?'—From 'Penelope's Irish Experiences' (Gay & Bird).

SUIT AFFECTING INSTALMENT BOOKBUYERS.

A case of considerable interest to publishers and purchasers of books sold on the instalment plan is reported in a recent issue of the Buffalo Courier. The suit was brought by James G. Ardrey, the Rochester representative of the publishing firm of George Barrie & Son, of Philadelphia, against Ralph Bowman, of Rochester, to recover a balance of over $40 alleged to be due on a contract to purchase the Barrie subscription edition of 'Balzac,' in fifty-one volumes, priced at $2.50 per volume. According to the Courier, the controversy hinged upon the question whether or not a 'limited edition' of the Balzac had been contracted for, and whether that condition had been fulfilled by the publisher. The testimony is said to have shown that in 1896 agreement was made by the defendant, Bowman, to buy the set in question, this set being number seventeen of the edition; that when thirty-one volumes had been received the defendant decided to sell the set, and advertised it with this purpose as a 'limited edition' in the Bookman; and that as a result of this advertisement he learned that another book-buyer, William Hamilton, of New Jersey, was the owner of a similar set, published at the same time, and also numbered seventeen. Mr. Bowman thereupon refused to accept delivery of succeeding volumes, claiming that the terms of the contract had been violated by the simultaneous issue of two editions, one bound in red and another in green, each containing half of the plates of the original édition de luxe, of which there were 110 volumes, with 250 etchings, selling at $10 each. Testimony was given to the effect that the green and red editions, copies of which were shown in court, were identical in paper, character of plates, and other details, with one or two variations in the illustrations. The publishers, however, claimed that they were two separate and distinct editions. The verdict given, after five minutes' deliberation by the jury, was 'no cause for action.' No wonder the instalment system of publication is not so popular as it was in America!

TYPEWRITERS BARRED FROM TURKEY.

The customs authorities of Constantinople have prohibited the entry of typewriters into Turkey, and 200 machines now in the custom-house have been ordered to be returned to the consignors. The authorities have taken up the peculiarly characteristic attitude that there is no distinct feature about typewriting by which the authorship could be recognised, or a person using a machine be traced. Consequently, anyone is able to put in type seditious writings without fear of compromising himself. Hectographic paste and fluid are also prohibited for similar reasons. The embassies are making representations on the subject with the view of inducing the Turkish Government to take a more reasonable attitude.—Geyer's Stationer.

FRENCH UNDERSSELLERS V. PUBLISHERS.

An unsuccessful effort to fight the Association of French Publishers has just been cabled to the New York Herald. A provincial bookseller named Le Goaziou refused to conform to the publishing syndicate's decision that dealer's should henceforth never allow purchasers a larger discount than twenty per cent. M. le Goaziou continued to give larger discounts till the big firms in the Association, MM. Hachette, Belin, Delagrave and Larousse refused to supply him with books. He sued nine publishers under the French law which forbids conspiracy with a view to creating a monopoly or unduly increasing the price of merchandise. M. le Goaziou has lost his case and must pay the costs. The court took the view that books could not be classified as ordinary merchandise.

A NEW LITERATURE.

'The gentleman listened attentively, fingering her manuscript as though literature were a tactile substance; then, with a confidential twist of his revolving chair, he emitted the verdict: "We ought to have had this ten years sooner."'

'Miss Anson took the words as an allusion to the repressed avidity of her readers. "It has been a long time for the public to wait," she solemnly assented.

'The publisher smiled. "They haven't waited," he said.

'She look at him strangely. "Haven't waited?"'

"No—they've gone off; taken another train. Literature's like a big railway station now, you know: there's a train starting every minute. People are not going to hang round the waiting-room. If they can't get to a place when they want to they go somewhere else."

'The application of this parable cost Miss Anson several minutes of throbbing silence. At length she said: "Then I am to understand that the public is no longer interested in—in my grandfather?" She felt as though heaven must blast the lips that risked such a conjecture.

"Well, it's this way. He's a name still, of course. People don't exactly want to be caught not knowing who he is; but they don't want to spend two dollars finding out, when they can look him up for nothing in any biographical dictionary."

'Miss Anson's world reeled. She felt herself adrift among mysterious forces, and no more thought of prolonging the discussion than of opposing an earthquake with argument. She went home carrying the manuscript like a wounded thing. On the return journey she found herself travelling straight towards a fact that had lurked for months in the background of her life, and that now seemed to await her on the very threshold; the fact that fewer visitors came to the House. She owned to herself that for the last four or five years the number had steadily diminished. Engrossed in her work, she had noted the change only to feel thankful that she had fewer interruptions. There had been a time when, at the travelling season, the bell rang continuously, and the ladies of the House lived in a chronic state of "best silks" and expectancy. It would have been impossible then to carry on any consecutive work; and she now saw that the silence which had gathered round her task had been the hush of death.

'Not of his death! The very walls cried out against the implication. It was the world's enthusiasm, the world's faith, the world's loyalty that had died. A corrupt generation that had turned aside to worship the brazen serpent.

Her heart yearned with a prophetic passion over the lost sheep straying in the wilderness. But all great glories had their interlunar period; and in due time her grandfather would once more flash full-orbed upon a darkling world.'—From Mrs. Wharton's 'Crucial Instances.'

BOOKSELLERS AND LONGEVITY.

Mr. Thatcher, of Bristol, sends us a long and interesting letter upon the respective longevity in his part of the country of farmers and shopkeepers, which we regret that exigencies of space prevent us from printing in full. He points out that the farmer has, generally, a very much shorter lease of life than the business man, quoting from his personal experience (Mr. Thatcher is a hale, athletic man of sixty-three) in support of his theory. He concludes his letter by a quotation from Kingsley: 'Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and content, and a hundred virtues which the idle never know.'—Bookseller.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'The Work of the Ninth Division,' by Major-General Sir H. E. Colville, K.C.M.G., C.B. It need scarcely be said that this volume is interesting. The movements of the Ninth Division during the war in South Africa have been important in themselves, but they have obtained even still greater recognition in this country from the discussions to which they have subsequently given rise. The book, however, possesses far more attraction for the military man than the general reader, and in a way it may be regarded as a reply by the author to the strictures passed upon his conduct of operations in the Orange Free State, which eventually resulted in his recall. One cannot but admire General Colville's honesty of purpose. He is almost painfully anxious to confess his errors and to award credit where such credit is due to others. The result is to impart an air of indecision to his conduct. We seem to see a man at an acute moment hampered by conflicting thoughts and without sufficient strength of mind to rise superior to the occasion and to take a determined course. No doubt much of this is due to General Colville's conscientiousness in writing this book that he is on his defence, but we cannot but think his extreme though scarcely unnatural sensitiveness, which has led to an undue attention to thoughts and motives, has greatly impaired its effectiveness. As regards the work of the Ninth Division the book supplies a very graphic and impartial description. The difficulties that had to be surmounted appear to have been enormous, and though General Colville hints that Lord Roberts thought little of their achievements it must be remembered that great leaders of men are often particularly backward in their expressions of approval, though censure is always ready to the hand. Even the great Wellington was a noteworthy instance of this. The volume, which confines itself closely to the actual doings from a tactical point of view of the Ninth Division, is supplied with several maps which will enable the reader to follow even still more closely the movements of this division of His Majesty's forces.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'Cricket Stories, Wise and Otherwise,' gathered by C. W. Alcock. A splendid series of laughs are in this new volume of 'Arrowsmith's Bristol Library,' and the reader who would grow stout may be heartily recommended to indulge in its perusal. A few of the stories are inevitably 'old soldiers,' but they are none the less exhilarating on that account, while others seem to have lost something of their piquancy in the process of being watered down for the press. The exclamation of Crosland, the Lancashire bowler, for instance, when he succeeded in effecting the downfall of a well-known Yorkshire clergyman was just a trifle more pungent than here reported. Of the stories generally we select one at random as a fair specimen of the good quality of the rest. In a match played in the country a player had run four for a leg hit, when the following conversation took place:—Wicket-keeper: 'Hullo! the bails are off. You must have kicked the wicket.' Batsman: 'I don't think I did.' Wicket-keeper to Umpire: 'How's that, Umpire?' Umpire: 'What did he do?' Wicket-keeper: 'Knocked the wicket with his foot.' Umpire to Batsman: 'Did you knock it, Sir?' Batsman: 'No, I don't think so.' Umpire: 'Hout!'

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Son.—'Felix Holt: the Radical,' by George Eliot. We have already alluded to the excellent Warwick edition of George Eliot's novels which Messrs. Blackwood are publishing, and in speaking of the latest issue can only again testify to its attractions of clear printing, thin paper, and flexible binding. By reason of the quality of the paper over seven hundred pages are compressed into a volume that can easily be carried in the coat pocket; and this is managed without the use of small type, which is so injurious to the eyesight. A more portable edition of the great novelist's works could not be desired.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Grasses: a Handbook for Use in the Field and Laboratory,' by H. Marshall Ward, Sc.D., F.R.S. This is one of the capital 'Cambridge Natural Science Manuals,' the general editorship of which for the biological series rests with Mr. Arthur E. Shipley. Professor Ward does not put forth his book as a complete treatise of grasses, but simply claims that it is 'an account of our common native species, so arranged that the student may learn how to closely observe and deal with the distinctive characters of these remarkable plants when such problems as the botanical analysis of a meadow or pasture, of hay, of weeds, or of "seed" grasses are presented, as well as when investigating questions of more abstract, scientific nature.' The various chapters treat of the vegetative organs, grasses classified according to their vegetative characters, their anatomy and histology, grasses classified according to the anatomical characters of the leaf, grasses in flower, grasses grouped according to their flowers and inflorescence, fruit and seed, and so forth. There is also an admirable index, glossary, and lists of synonyms. The handbook should prove a most serviceable and practical aid to students exploring this branch of botanical science; and alike in the matter of its arrangement, illustrations, and general production it is worthy of cordial recommendation.

From the same.—'An Outline History of the British Empire from 1500 to 1870,' by W. H. Woodward, Christ Church, Oxon., Principal of University Training College, Liverpool. In this Outline History the author has achieved a signal success in a difficult task. He has written a concise and accurate yet withal an interesting recital of the most important period in the history of Britain and of its gradual development into the British Empire of to-day. That period begins with the sixteenth century, eight years after Columbus discovered the American continent under the auspices of Spain instead of England, because Henry VII.'s invitation to come to London, there to talk over the project of his voyage with the King, reached Columbus too late. The arrangement of matter is excellent. The book is in twelve chapters; each chapter is broken up into paragraphs which are numbered and have distinctive headlines. A table of more important dates opens the volume, which is illustrated by excellent coloured maps.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Ltd.—It says much for the personality of the German Emperor that he seems to loom large in the June number of the Magazine of Art, though actually the allusion to his portrait in enamel by Professor von Herkomer occupies but two pages. It is accompanied, however, by three striking illustrations, one a reproduction of the great enamel, the other two preparatory studies for the work. The editor discourses with pleasant artistic insight on some of the exhibits at the Royal Academy and New Gallery, and examples are given of the work of Frank Dicksee, George Clausen, Professor Herkomer, Alfred East, G. F. Watts, Sir J. D. Linton, Sir George Reid, and others. An article of much interest is Mr. William Roberts's 'Portraits of the Two Duchesses of Devonshire,' which is illustrated with the portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Gainsborough, J. Nixon, and P. Wray, while those concerned in a lower form of art, appertaining to theatrical display, will be attracted by Mr. Wilhelm's designs for the ballet of 'In Butterfly Land' at the Empire Theatre. Every variety of artistic instinct, in fact, is catered for in the Magazine of Art, and the articles are selected with admirable judgment and knowledge of the popular taste. We should not omit to add that the frontispiece of the present issue is a reproduction of J. H. Fragonard's picture, 'A Lady Carving her Name' ('Le Chiffre d'Amour'), in the Wallace Collection.

From the same.—'An Eventful Life: Adventures, Incidents, Inferences,' by Alexander James Harrison, M.A., B.D. These autobiographical notes reveal a career of unusual diversity, though in the main object Mr. Harrison's life has been uniformly consistent. The book, to use the words of the author, is 'the story of a fighter, optimist, sceptic, preacher, priest, and missionary, and a record of lessons learned under these varied aspects.' Mr. Harrison commences with his earliest years, and relates the influences and events of his life as child, boy, young man, local preacher, minister, and clergyman. Much of the book is of the anecdotal order, and there are several good stories, either of experiences happening to the author on his travels in connection with the evidential work to which he has devoted so much of his time or picked up at second hand. The general impression produced upon the reader is of a clever resourceful man, not altogether unmindful of his own gifts, and perhaps just a trifle self-satisfied. Once when arguing on the platform with Mr. Bradlaugh he asked that well-known atheist whether he believed he existed. 'He replied in the negative. I asked, "Do you know you exist?" "Yes." "How do you know?" "By self-consciousness." "By self-consciousness! But you have argued that the perceived object must be external to the perceiving subject. Does it not follow that in order to know yourself you must get outside of yourself?"' The audience, Mr. Harrison says, enjoyed the question, not so much for its wit as its wisdom. In the course of the volume the author pays a sincere tribute of appreciation to the late Bishop Fraser of Manchester.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Correspondence College Press).—'Euripides: Medea,' edited by John Thompson, M.A., and T. R. Mills, M.A. The 'Medea' of Euripides is one of the best of the Greek dramatist's plays, and in some respects presents a sublimity of tragic passion rarely reached by the author. The present edition is distinguished by many good features which should recommend it to the notice of the student and candidate for university distinction. The text, based mainly on that of Prinz, is clearly and accurately printed, all doubtful or corrupt passages being called attention to in the Notes, where the reasons for suspecting a corruption are given, and the most probable emendations suggested; while an interesting, well written Introduction furnishes such information regarding the life of the author, the story of Medea, character of the drama, structure of a Greek tragedy, the various metres, and so forth, as are necessary for the scholar's thorough conception of the work. The notes are everything that notes should be—concise, reliable, simply expressed, and never overdone.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd. 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' by Edith Sichel; with numerous illustrations. A delightful volume, although its author somewhat diffidently says in her brief preface, 'It has been difficult to find a title modest enough for a book which in no way claims to be a chronicle of events, political or military. It is merely a personal history—an effort to recall a few of the less-known figures that moved and had their being in France in the first half of the sixteenth century.' The period chosen begins with the accession of Louis XII. in 1498 and ends with the death of Francis I. in 1547, unquestionably the best period of the earlier Renaissance in France, for, as the author says: 'Between 1490 and 1550 the modern world was born. Never was art, never was social life more significant than then.' As women play so important a part both in art and social life, she has taken as her central figure Margaret of Angoulême, sister of Francis I., a typical personage of the period, whom Wolsey proposed to Henry VIII. at an early stage of that king's divorce proceedings as successor to Queen Katherine. 'There is,' said the Cardinal, 'a woman in France who is above all other women, none other so worthy of your hand.' But Margaret refused consent to a scheme that would have 'taken away the Queen's life and happiness.' So she who had been wooed by Henry VII. when she was but eight, refused his son when more than thirty, and married at thirty-five Henri of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV., of whom Charles V. said that he was the only man he had seen in France. Very bright and attractive is the picture of the Renaissance painted for us in this work, which is evidently a labour of love; but there is a dark background to it, for Francis's persecutions of the Protestants in general and of the Vaudois in particular offer a spectacle rather lurid than bright. Prefixed to the work is a long list of authorities, of which excellent use has been made, and the result is this very acceptable volume, which is embellished by reproductions of authentic portraits and other illustrations, is provided with a capital index, and got up in a style worthy alike of so interesting a theme and of the literary ability displayed in its treatment.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Adam Bede,' by George Eliot. When we say that this work has been added to the 'Temple Classics,' it is sufficient testimony for most readers that the story has been worthily produced, printed, and bound. We should add, however, that the present edition is in two volumes, and has been seen through the press by Miss Annie Matheson, who has also written a short appreciation of the work and its author. It would have been better, perhaps, if this had been inserted before the story rather than at its end, where it is liable to be overlooked. Each volume has a frontispiece, in the one case a portrait of George Eliot's father—some of whose characteristics are suggested in the portrait of Adam Bede; in the other, the house at Ellaston where Mr. William Evans lived and died. Admirers of George Eliot who would wish to possess a small, light, and handy edition of what may be considered in many respects her chief work could scarcely do better than invest their money with Messrs. Dent.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Emperor's Design,' by Surgeon-Major H. M. Greenhow. Though matters are considerably muddled up in this novel and little attention is apparently paid to correct local colouring, the narrative has an interest which will successfully tide the ordinary reader over its pages. The scene of the story is laid at the court of Jehangier, an Indian potentate, and the main excitement arises from the abduction of a beautiful Italian girl upon whom the hero has fixed his affections and who has also inspired the unwelcome attentions of the Emperor. The story, so far as its incidents go, is fairly engrossing, but in other respects is not particularly noticeable.

From Mr. Henry Frowde.—'The Cowper Anthology, 1775-1800 A.D.,' edited by Professor Edward Arber, F.S.A. Few of the excellent anthologies published by Mr. Frowde have been more acceptable than this, nor have the recommendations of discriminative editorship and admirable production been more strongly marked. In addition to Cowper, the chief poets laid under contribution are Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Robert Burns, Carolina Nairne (best known as the author of 'The Land o' the Leal,' 'Caller Herrin,' and other Scotch songs), Joanna Bailie, Robert Southey, William Blake, Hector MacNeill, the Hon. William Robert Spencer, Matthew Gregory Lewis, Susanna Blamire, the Rev. John Wolcot (who wrote under the name of 'Peter Pindar'), and William Wordsworth. Other names scarcely so well represented are Charles Lamb, Susan Edmonstone Ferrier, Charles Dibdin, Ann Radcliffe, Samuel Rogers, William Roscoe, Brinsley Sheridan, and the Rev. Thomas Warton, who was Poet Laureate from 1785 to 1790. In the same series we have to acknowledge receipt of 'The Dunbar Anthology, 1401-1508,' which is also edited by Professor Arber, and contains a selection of poems by William Dunbar, Thomas Feilde, Stephen Hawes, Robert Henryson, Charles de Valois, Duke of Orleans, John Lydgate, and others. 'The Dunbar Anthology' heads the list of ten volumes in the series of 'British Anthologies' while the 'Cowper Anthology' brings up the rear. We have every admiration for their production, and can well endorse the claim put forth by the editor that in them the reader possesses 'the most diversified and representative poetical miscellany that has yet appeared in our language.'

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Penelope's Irish Experiences,' by Kate Douglas Wiggin. What a light-hearted, joyous ring there is about Mrs. Wiggin's latest book, and how thoroughly it hits off the characteristics of the 'distressful country'! From the moment of the party's arrival at Dublin, where they pick up a 'derelict' in the shape of Miss Benella Dusenberry from Salem, Massachusetts, the narrative flows pleasantly along to a succession of delightfully amusing episodes until it ends with the betrothal of Salemina to a professor of Archæology and the departure of Penelope and the friends who have aided her in the exploration of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to other shores. A perfectly fascinating air of irresponsibility pervades the book, and this, as we have said, is singularly appropriate to its subject. The way the 'derelict,' lying limp and unconscious on the quay at the North Wall, is added by her own force of complete helplessness to the responsibilities of the party forms quite a characteristic opening to the narrative, and henceforward we are entirely under the spell of Mrs. Wiggin's vivacious humour. The experiences that befall the three women in their wanderings are often exceedingly comical, and they certainly lose nothing in the manner of their telling. On one occasion they are engaged to dine with Lord and Lady Killbally at Balkilly Castle. When the time comes for dressing it is found that the knob handle of Salemina's bedroom door has fallen off, and that it is impossible to get into the room. Considering that the 'waist' of her dress is there, the situation is appalling. Eventually, as no way can be found of getting into the apartment, there being no ladder, and, after the happy-go-lucky fashion of Ireland, no servants in sufficient numbers to break down the door, Penelope and Francesca are obliged to go alone to the dinner, leaving Salemina behind. However, after they have gone, the faithful Benella is equal to the occasion, and, by arranging a number of tables one on top of the other, manages to get through the window of the closed room. Salemina is then driven to the Castle in a donkey cart, being advised by the onlookers before they start that should the animal show any signs of contrariness it would be best to 'give him a couple of belts anondher the hind leg, melady, and that'll put the fear o' God in him.' The volume is rich in amusing incidents of this kind, and its humour is so thoroughly infectious that it should rival in popularity even the best of the authoress's previous works.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Greenhouse Construction and Heating: containing full descriptions of the various kinds of Greenhouses, Stove Houses, Forcing Houses, Pits and Frames, with Directions for their Construction, and also Descriptions of the different types of Boilers, Pipes, and Heating Apparatus generally, with Instructions for Fixing the same,' by B. C. Ravenscroft. The title of this work affords such a comprehensive idea of its contents that in a short notice nothing remains to be said except that the book ably fulfils the promises there held out. It should prove a serviceable friend to the large number of men whose interests are bound up with the pleasurable occupation of amateur gardening; and they will, without doubt, derive many useful suggestions from its pages. The volume is well illustrated, and bound in a suitable floral cover.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Limited.—'Mad?' by J. P. Loughnan. The title of this story will afford some idea as to its character. It is thoroughly sensational in tone. An Italian gentleman, with murder at his heart, who in his private moments caresses a bright steel dagger and addresses to it loving words of confidence on the deed to be performed when the MAN is found, forms a delightful centre figure for drama, even when crudely constructed as in this case. For our own part we should say he was very mad indeed.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Her Mountain Lover,' by Hamlin Garland. In many respects we think this is the best volume of the 'Dollar Library' that has yet appeared.

It tells the story of a young miner who came to this country from Colorado for the purpose of obtaining financial support for the exploitation of a big mine on the Grizzly Bear, just above Waggon Wheel. Jim Matterson is a thorough American of a pretty uncivilised type, rough and uncompromising in his manner, but sincere and honest to a degree—the model of a fine, handsome, uncultivated savage. Naturally, the artificiality of London life sickens him; he wearies for the invigorating air of the mountain side and the natural outdoor existence he has left behind him at Denver. But metropolitan society, on the other hand, takes rather kindly to the big stalwart stranger—he is so picturesque in appearance, so original and amusing in his remarks, so different from the majority of the men who move about London drawing-rooms. In short, he is the novelty of the hour, just as Buffalo Bill was made much of during a season some years ago. Among the ladies he meets is Mary Brien, a young girl not only of charming appearance but of still more fascinating independence of character. They become great friends, on her side because he frankly interests her, on his because she is the one being on this side of the Atlantic to whom he can talk freely and who seems to understand him. Naturally, complications result from their relationship, but what form they take we shall not destroy the prospective reader's interest by disclosing. The principal entertainment of the story arises from Jim's candid observations of London life and the people he meets. We have found it very interesting throughout, nor can we leave the volume without calling attention to its excellent production, both printing and binding being most carefully done.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Royal Sisters: a Romance,' by Frank Mathew. The 'Royal Sisters' of this romance—which purports to have been written by no less exalted a personage than William, Lord Howard of Effingham, Lord High Admiral of England—are the Princesses Mary and Elizabeth Tudor, daughters of King Henry VIII. The story is in two books, whereof the first, called 'The Book of God's own Knight,' has for groundwork the Duke of Northumberland's conspiracy to usurp the authority of the Crown for the aggrandisement of his own family and the exclusion of the royal sisters from the throne of their father; while the second book, 'The Book of Bloody Mary,' deals with the reign of the elder of the sisters. There is no lack of incident and movement in this story, which is, however, somewhat marred by a rather stilted style and spasmodic dialogues; and, while one does not expect strict accuracy even in an historical romance, we are rather surprised to read that Princess Mary, when offended at being ordered to inform her chaplains that the mass must cease, should have said to the council: 'If anyone troubles (sic) me the Emperor of Spain (!) shall hear of it'; and that Simon Renard, special envoy of the Emperor Charles V. of the Holy Roman Empire, is said to have 'looked at the King (Edward VI.), and exclaimed: The Emperor of Spain (!) holds your Majesty to the promise (of tolerating the mass at Copt Hall), and says he would remedy its breach with the sword.'

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Character-study seems' to be a strongly marked feature of this month's Longman's Magazine. It is attractively shown in Mrs. Francis Blundell's serial story 'Fyander's Widow' and Miss Edith Dart's 'Abel Susanna'; and afterwards Mr. Fred Whishaw, from a natural history point of view, continues the pursuit. His article, entitled 'In the Woods at Sunrise,' shows a quick observation of the furred and feathered community. Mr. Andrew Lang principally discourses, 'At the Sign of the Ship,' of the ways of murderers and the influences that give rise to their actions, his remarks being apparently suggested by Mr. H. B. Irving's recently published work on 'Studies of French Criminals.' The subject is extremely interesting, not the less so because it affords little opportunity of arriving at a definite conclusion. The other articles of the number are 'Madame Récamier,' by Mrs. S. G. Talentyre, and 'The Mission of Mr. Rider Haggard and Rural Education,' by Mr. R. R. C. Gregory. There is also a poem by Mr. D. J. Robertson entitled 'A Stone Eagle.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—Scribner's Magazine for June contains a very varied assortment of papers. For many readers the most interesting will be Mr. John La Farge's account of his visit to the Samoans, the people among whom Robert Louis Stevenson found his adopted home. The illustrations to this article, mostly from sketches made at the time, are especially curious in the pose of the figure, which seems to be characteristic of Samoan women. After a considerable lapse Mr. Henry Norman resumes his articles on 'Russia of To-Day,' with a paper on 'Finland,' and as might naturally be expected, he enters with some fervour into the relations between Russia and Finland, pointing out with the consciousness of complete self-belief the course that the country of the Czar should follow. Modesty is scarcely the distinguishing feature of the paper politician. Other articles that call for notice are 'The Scottish University,' by John Grier Hibben, and 'Oratory,' by Senator George F. Hoar. There is also a plentiful supply of fiction in the number, including a continuation of Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin's 'Diary of a Goose Girl,' and poetry is by no means unrepresented. The 'Point of View' and 'Field of Art' bring to a close a very enjoyable number, especially remarkable for its many and fine illustrations.

From the same.—'Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days,' by E. Marston. In a handy, beautifully printed, and tastefully bound volume Mr. Edward Marston has gathered together those bright and genial studies of booksellers of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries which have recently appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. It is possible that to the superficial observer the life of a bookseller may appear essentially prosaic. Be this as it may, there is no lack of interest, even of romance, in those pleasant sketches, which nevertheless are as instructive as interesting; and many lessons in duty, self-help, and thrift may be learned from them by the young; if, haply, in this age of sport and pleasure, young people have time for reading aught save cram books. By way of example, take the case of the author of 'Clarissa Harlowe,' who, serving diligently during a seven years' apprenticeship a hard taskmaster who grudged every hour which his apprentice did not devote to his profit, stole from the hours of rest and relaxation his reading times for mental improvement. In this last but not the least interesting of his 'Sketches'—to wit, that of James Lackington—the author says, 'If I am to continue these "Sketches" I must hark back a century or two.' We trust Mr. Marston may see his way to continue these 'Sketches,' the only fault to be found with which is that there are not more of them. Should he think of writing a new series we would venture to remind him of a suggestion made by Boswell to Johnson in Mr. Thomas Warton's rooms at Trinity, when the great lexicographer and his future biographer visited Oxford in 1776. 'I said,' writes Boswell, 'Mr. Robert Dodsley's life should be written as he had been so much connected with the wits of his time, and by his literary merit had raised himself from the station of a footman.' Dr. Johnson's objection, that he doubted if Dodsley's brother James, who was yet alive, would thank a man who should write his life, although Dodsley himself was not unwilling that his own low condition should be recollected, no longer holds good. It was Robert Dodsley who suggested to Johnson that a dictionary of the English language would be work likely to be well received by the public; it was he who started the 'Annual Register,' which still flourishes; and he even wrote a successful tragedy, 'Cleone,' which Bennet Langton read to Johnson, when, having finished an act and waiting to know if he should proceed, was rewarded by the Doctor saying: 'Come, let's have some more, let's go into the slaughter-house again, Lanky. But, I am afraid there's more blood than brains!'

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Last of the Great Scouts: the Life Story of Col. William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill,"' as told by his sister, Helen Cody Wetmore. With illustrations. If any reader, in search of an exciting, amusing, and at the same time truthful story, attracted by Rosa Bonheur's striking picture of Buffalo Bill on horseback, and undeterred by the genealogy of that hero, in whose veins, we are told, the genuine royal blood of King Milesius of Spain courses, begin the perusal of 'The Last of the Great Scouts,' he must indeed be hard to please if he does not read it through to the end. Rosa Bonheur painted the portrait which makes so effective a frontispiece to this biography in 1889, during Col. Cody's second visit to Europe. While he was staying in Paris the painter of the famous 'Horse Fair' invited Buffalo Bill to visit her; in return for which honour he gave her the run of his stables, where she daily made studies of his magnificent horses; and, as a token of her appreciation of his courtesy, painted him on his favourite horse. Two years later, while the Colonel was fighting against the Sioux who had risen, news was brought to him by telegram that his beautiful house Welcome Wigwam was on fire. He wired back the characteristic reply: 'Save Rosa Bonheur's picture and the house may go to blazes.' Valuable as Rosa Bonheur's painting undoubtedly is, Mrs. Helen Cody Wetmore has in this volume given her readers an equally attractive portrait of her brave and kind-hearted brother, towards whom one is instinctively drawn by the pluck he showed, when only eight, in saving from drowning his injured dog, Turk. Space fails to do justice to this moving history of a many-sided career which should be possessed by all lovers of sport and adventure.

From the Minerva Publishing Syndicate.—'The New Curative Treatment of Disease,' by M. Platen, in two volumes, well and fully illustrated. The object of this book is to teach in plain language—How to avoid illness, How to cure disease, How to restore health, How to treat accidents. One is always sceptical about a work which announces that 'Doctors and Drugs are not required'; at the same time, as far as we are able to judge, this work seems to us to be honestly and plainly written with common sense, and is not to be confounded with the ordinary quack production.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Monsieur Beaucaire,' by Booth Tarkington, illustrated by C. D. Williams. Few English health resorts possess greater and more varied attractions than Bath; and fewer still have so great a claim on the gratitude of countless thousands for the inestimable benefits conferred by its waters. Bath can also claim the thanks of innumerable readers as having inspired some of the best-known creations of authors so widely separated by time and in their special gifts as Chaucer, Fielding, Smollett, Jane Austen, Charles Dickens, and others. It was on February 7, 1840, at a celebration of Dickens's birthday, in Walter Savage Landor's Bath lodgings, 35 St. James's Square, that the great novelist first thought of 'Little Nell.' The house is, happily, still standing. With such Bath claims upon our gratitude we take pleasure in welcoming Mr. Booth Tarkington's attractive contribution to the literature of King Bladud's city. It were unfair to analyse the construction of a novelette so slight as 'Monsieur Beaucaire.' We regret, however, that in its pages English society should be represented by such dubious characters as the Duke of Winterset and his allies, while French society of the period has for its representative that good Duke of Orleans, who married in 1724 the amiable Princess Augusta Maria of Baden, after whose death, two years later, he gradually withdrew from public life, occupying himself with works of charity, and who died February 4, 1752, in the Abbey of St. Geneviève, at the early age of forty-eight. Voltaire did this prince scant justice, when, blaming him for not claiming the regency on the death of his father Philippe d'Orléans, in December 1723, he wrote: 'Le duc de Chartres, d'un caractère faible et bizarre, plus fait pour une cellule à Sainte Geneviève, où il a fini ses jours, que pour gouverner un État, ne demanda pas la place de son père.' 'Monsieur Beaucaire' is prettily illustrated by Mr. C. D. Williams, and is no doubt destined to a wide popularity, not only at Bath but elsewhere, in the very dainty dress in which it issues from the time-honoured house of Murray.

From the same.—'Small-Boat Sailing: an Explanation of the Management of Small Yachts; Half-Decked and Open Sailing Boats of Various Rigs; Sailing on Sea and on River; Cruising &c.,' by E. F. Knight. To the lover of sailing who is something more than a mere landsman afloat and takes a practical interest in his pursuit, this volume will prove a source of the keenest delight. It seductively invites him to a discussion of the topics that are dear to a yachtsman's heart; the selection of a boat, action of the wind when in different quarters, advantages and disadvantages of various kinds of open-sailing, half-decked, and decked boats, the art of seamanship, the management of open boats, the fitting out and navigation of a cruising yacht, the science of coasting, Board of Trade and other regulations affecting yachtsmen, and the numerous side issues that arise from these main subjects. The volume is also supplied with a large number of drawings by Mr. H. Warington Smyth, most of them original, but some from designs made by Mr. Knight with his left hand, the author having unfortunately been obliged to have his right arm amputated in consequence of the severe wound received at the battle of Belmont. The work may be recommended to the enthusiastic yachtsman with every feeling of confidence.

From the Office, 5 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.—'The Studio, May 15, 1901.'

The principal attractions of this number are 'The Medallist's Art as seen at the Paris Exhibition,' by Roger Marx, 'The Art of True Enamelling upon Metals,' by Alexander Fisher, and 'The New Movement in Russian Decorative Art,' by Netta Peacock. Each of these articles is profusely illustrated. The 'supplements' of the number embrace four tinted plates of metals by various artists, a reproduction in colours of 'The King's Gold Cup' (fifteenth century), and a reproduction in colours of a sketch portrait of George Frampton, A.R.A., by J. H. Bacon. Studio talk gathered from London, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Dresden, Brussels, Budapest, Vienna, and Melbourne is also included; there are a list of awards in the Studio prize competitions; and the 'Lay Figure' discourses on the Victoria Memorial. Altogether a particularly interesting number.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Riallaro: the Archipelago of Exiles,' by Godfrey Sveven. The title of this story is taken from a supposed group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, where the manners and customs of the natives are certainly unique, and form an amusing satire on civilisation in more modern communities. The account of this strange country is supplied by three Englishmen who are mining in New Zealand. They first hear of it through a mysterious stranger, who makes their acquaintance in the form of a bird, and is promptly shot at by the three in return for his deception. 'Riallaro' indicates 'the ring of mist,' but once having penetrated this some startling disclosures are made. The book is thoroughly fanciful and not a little humorous, but is too old-fashioned in style, we are afraid, ever to obtain a hold upon popular esteem. It has been likened by the publishers to 'Gulliver's Travels,' but even Dean Swift's incomparable work, if written at the present day, would probably fail to awaken great enthusiasm. Age is not without its influences even upon fiction-readers.

From Messrs. Hugh Rees, Limited.—'Elementa Arithmetica,' by the author of 'Elementary Examples in Arithmetic, Algebra, and Geometry.' Some serviceable rules in Multiplication, Division, Reduction, Vulgar Fractions, Decimal Fractions, Simple Interest, Discount, Profit and Loss, &c., are set forth in this unpretentious volume, and the book will be found of great help in those Preparatory Schools where 'Pendlebury's Arithmetic' ('Examples only') is in use. The objects of the book are, firstly, to insure uniformity of method in the different classes of a school; and, secondly, to supply the boys with models of the way in which they should set down their work.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Author of "The Peep of Day": being the Life Story of Mrs. Mortimer,' by her Niece, Mrs. Meyer, with an Introduction by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Mention of 'The Peep of Day' will carry most readers' minds back to the days of their childhood, when Mrs. Mortimer's work laid the foundation for the appreciative reading of such volumes as 'Line upon Line,' 'The Wide, Wide World,' 'Ministering Children,' 'The Ministry of Life,' 'The Fairchild Family,' and other highly cherished works. Mrs. Meyer's biography supplies an extremely appreciative account of the life of the distinguished authoress, and the simple unaffected manner of its narration adds a further charm to the record of a career devoted in all self-denying earnestness to the service of God. Mrs. Mortimer died in 1878 at the age of 78. Her father, David Bevan, was descended from Bran the Blessed and from Robert Barclay, the Apologist of the Friends or Quakers. As a child she was delicate and fractious, and it was not until later years that she evinced that spirit of Christian piety which afterwards distinguished her life. She was, as Mr. Meyer points out, exceptionally gifted in the power of conveying the teachings of Scripture to young people, though in her case, as the pages of this biography prove, the capability chiefly arose from her patience in taking pains. She had had wide experience in the teaching of Sunday school children, and as her extreme conscientiousness made her devote close attention to the work, she early cultivated the art of great simplicity and unaffectedness. Mrs. Mortimer fortunately left behind her a considerable number of personal memoranda, which have been made use of in this volume; and the result is to present a picture of her life and character that has many features of extreme interest. The illustrations of the volume embrace a photogravure portrait and views of Hale End, Walthamstow, Belmont, Fosbury House, Casterton Hall, and Casterton Church, with all of which places Mrs. Mortimer was closely connected.

From Messrs. W. R. Russell & Co.—'Saxon's Everybody's Ready Reckoner, with Tables of Interest, Discount, Wages, &c.' A useful little book which provides the means of performing extensive calculations in a minimum of time. With such a friend as this at his elbow the city merchant should never be at a loss to make out with serviceable expedition the most complicated financial estimates.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'Catholic Usages, So-called,' by 'John Myrc.' The teaching of this volume loses none of its force through being conveyed under the guise of fiction. On the death of John Bouverie Kelsey, parish priest of Oldbury, in the diocese of Durham, a man absolutely loyal to the Book of Common Prayer and the Canons of the English Church, he is succeeded in the benefice by the Rev. Ernest Headstrong, who is suspected of Roman proclivities. Prior to entering upon his new duties, Headstrong determines to take a Continental trip, accompanied by his friend, the Rev. Francis Golightly, for the purpose of studying the customs followed at the churches abroad. The result shows itself on his return in a complete upsetting of the old form of worship at Oldbury, and the introduction of various new-fangled ceremonial usages copied from the Romish service. The Bishop of the diocese, appealed to by the congregation, then interferes, and sends down his Archdeacon to inquire into the matter. In an argument that now ensues between the offending clergy and the Archdeacon the latter has entirely the best of it, and happily the Revs. Headstrong and Golightly are not too obstinate to acknowledge the error of their ways. It will be seen that the fabric thus outlined allows of the author conveying much technical instruction in regard to the ritual of the Church service, and of this he makes judicious and capable use.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Modern Cremation,' by Sir Henry Thompson, Bart. Fourth edition, revised and enlarged. So many and important are the interests involved in the question of cremation that the demand for a fourth edition of Sir Henry Thompson's valuable and comprehensive work is a matter for congratulation. The author has made important additions to the edition of 1899, and has brought the history and practice up to date, besides giving a condensed report of the work of the Cremation Society of England during the twenty-seven years of its existence. These matters occupy the first three chapters. The fourth treats of the value of cremation in deaths from contagious diseases; the fifth states the argument for it as first presented twenty-five years ago; and the sixth argues the subject on the basis of a later and larger experience. These are supplemented by an Appendix of directions and instructions. Plates, giving views of the Society's chapel and crematoria, and woodcuts of cinerary urns illustrate the work, which should have a large circulation.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Letters of her Mother to Elizabeth.' Nothing so much shows the strain of competition in the book trade as the eagerness with which a new idea is caught up and exploited until it becomes a perfect drug in the market. A move having been once made, letters are all the rage just now, and of course, Elizabeth having indited some very piquant outspoken correspondence to her mother, that good lady must now reply with epistles that are hardly less candid and amusing. Elizabeth's mamma is by way of being fashionable, and she evidently moves in highly distinguished circles. The ways of some of the haut ton, however, seem a little dubious, and under the influence of wine the men conduct themselves very much after the same fashion as less aristocratic members of the community. The women, too, powder and rouge, talk scandal and mischievous gossip in a way that is outrageous, nor is Elizabeth's mamma slow to hint at even greater delinquencies. The book is very amusing, and will cause the worldly-minded many a hearty laugh; but it is to be hoped most mothers do not write such letters to their daughters. But then Elizabeth, as her previous disclosures showed, is quite an exceptional young person.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Limited.—'Lest we Forget,' by Joseph Hocking, illustrated by J. B. Davis. There are few more romantic periods in the history of England than that selected by Mr. Joseph Hocking for this latest, but by no means least interesting, of his long and successful series of novels. The period is that during which Mary Tudor was queen, and the story is told by Master Richard Hamstead the younger, the hero of it, who informs the reader that he was moved to write his experiences by the vicar of his parish, whose favourite topic was the history of his own land and who thought it a pity 'that we get so little of our history first-hand. . . . Most of the history one reads is written by those who can only relate hearsays.' In this connection, one might inquire, is not hearsay the sole authority for designating the house in Fleet Street, facing Chancery Lane, the ground floor of which is a haircutter's shop, as the Palace of Henry VIII.? We thought dear old N. and Q. had disproved that tradition. Master Richard's story begins where his father was summoned to London to be present at Queen Mary's coronation, which he attended joyfully, for 'he was tired of the reign of a forward boy-king, who was tool of a schemer like Northumberland.' Everybody knows that Queen Mary was crowned on October 1, 1553, and this our first-hand historian states, but he also says that big hailstones fell on that day as red as blood. However, as a matter of fact, if we may trust such a second-hand historian as the late Mr. Froude, it was not the Queen's coronation day, but the day of King Edward's death, July 7, 1553, that 'was ushered in with signs and wonders, as if heaven and earth were in labour with revolution. The hail lay upon the grass in London gardens as red as blood; and he mentions other portentous phenomena that happened on that ill-omened day. Richard Hamstead the elder belonged to a family that 'for many generations had been true to the old faith, and would have nought to do with the changes some people believed necessary.' So he comes back from London heartily glad that Lady Jane Grey is shut up in the Tower and Queen Mary seated on the throne, and that there is a chance of advancement in the State for his son, who is to go to Lambeth to see Bishops Bonner and Gardiner, who wish to employ him in some important work. The next day the youth rides from his father's house at Barnet to London, and has an interview with the two bishops; the description of whom and the account of Richard's interview with them fill a well-written chapter. Bishop Gardiner entrusts Richard with a letter to hand to Godfrey Bedford of Brentwood, who is a suspected person, but of whom the bishops profess a desire to prove the innocence through the testimony of Hamstead, who is to stay at Barcroft Hall, the suspected man's house, until his loyalty shall have been proved. How the letter is handed to Dick by Fernand Toledo, a mysterious Spaniard, how he fares on his mission, how he refuses to join Bedford and his friends in Sir Thomas Wyatt's plot, his escapes, duels, imprisonments, and other adventures, as well as the descriptions of various executions, are all very graphically narrated in Mr. Joseph Hocking's romance, which never allows the reader's interest to flag from beginning to end.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'How to Read the Money Article,' by Charles Duguid. This concise treatise supplies a useful guide to the accurate appreciation of financial intelligence as conveyed through the public press, though possibly it may not be without its depressing influences for the moralist. The writer's chief aim has been to enable the uninitiated to cope with the technicalities of the newspaper money article, but here and there, especially in such chapters as those on 'The Writer of the Article,' 'Prospectus Notices,' 'Company Meetings,' and 'Corruption in Financial Journalism,' some idea is afforded of the inner working of the speculative system. One great merit the work possesses is that the author is always simple and clear, carefully abstaining from writing over the heads of his readers; and the result is a book of real practical value.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Cassell & Company have issued a third and cheap edition of 'Spectre Gold: a Romance of Klondyke,' by Headon Hill, with eight illustrations by Fred Pegram. The story is in the best manner of the author, and abounds in thrilling episodes. Once started upon, it will scarcely be laid aside, no matter what the hour of night, until the concluding chapter is reached.—We have received from Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited, a copy of their new and enlarged edition of the 'Acrostic Dictionary,' by Mrs. A. Cyril-Pearson, containing about forty thousand words, with their initials and finals alphabetically arranged. The book should prove exceedingly useful to the large number of readers of the magazines and weekly newspapers who find their enjoyment in acrostic solving.—Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have issued a sixpenny edition of George Meredith's 'Rhoda Fleming,' and that the book will have a large sale in its cheaper form we can scarcely doubt. It should introduce the celebrated author to thousands of homes where he has hitherto been only a name.—Messrs. Methuen & Co. publish a sixpenny edition of one of Mr. Baring-Gould's best stories, 'Cheap-Jack Zita,' forming No. 21 of their series 'The Novelist.'—Mrs. Lovett Cameron's clever and interesting tale, 'A Difficult Matter,' has been issued in a new and well-printed edition at sixpence by Mr. John Long.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

By E. MARSTON.

- CHAPTER. CONTENTS.
I. JACOB TONSON—1656-1736. Portrait.
II. THOMAS GUY—1644-1724. Portrait.
III. JOHN DUNTON—1659-1733. Portrait.
IV. SAMUEL RICHARDSON—1689-1761. Portrait.
V. THOMAS GENT—1691-1778. Portrait.
VI. ALICE GUY (wife of Thomas Gent).
VII. WILLIAM HUTTON—1723-1815. Portrait.
VIII. JAMES LACKINGTON—1746-1815. Portrait.

"Mr. Edward Marston, the well-known publisher and angler, has been induced to bring together and issue in a pretty little volume (S. Low & Co.) the "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days" which he wrote originally for the Publishers' Circular. By so doing he has laid all book lovers under a heavy but agreeable obligation.

"These stories of the lives of Jacob Tonson, Thomas Guy, John Dunton, Samuel Richardson, Thomas Gent, William Hutton, and James Lackington were all worthy of the permanence and vogue which they will secure by being obtainable in book form. The facts about Richardson are tolerably well known, but with the other booksellers named the public are not very well acquainted, and herein Mr. Marston pleasantly enlightens them. He writes an easy, genial style, and so puts his material together in appetising fashion. He supplies portraits of all his subjects, and is to be thanked for the type, paper, and binding bestowed upon the book, which is one of the daintiest ever brought out by his firm."

LEEDS MERCURY.

"There is a pleasant literary flavour in this little volume, many picture-gems but almost forgotten facts, and a few portraits."

ŒUVRES DE VICTOR HUGO

ÉDITION NATIONALE, 43 VOLUMES IN-4, BROCHÉS

2500 Illustrations gravées en taille-douce par Deux cents Artistes : Peintres, Graveurs, Sculpteurs.

Œuvre gigantesque, ayant coûté TROIS MILLIONS à établir, et dix années de travail. Aucun des grands Écrivains contemporains français, ni Balzac, ni Chateaubriand, ni Flaubert, ni Lamartine, ni Musset, ne possède une pareille édition. Seul le nom de Victor Hugo permettait de grouper les éléments nécessaires pour une œuvre aussi colossale.

Cette publication, le Clou de la Librairie de Luxe, véritable débauche artistique, entreprise téméraire, qu'aucun de nos grands Éditeurs n'oserait entreprendre aujourd'hui, forme 43 volumes d'une richesse d'illustration inconnue jusqu'à ce jour. C'est la plus grande entreprise de librairie française, la plus considérable, par sa valeur littéraire et son importance artistique.

Au point de vue littéraire : Victor Hugo.

Au point de vue artistique : Deux cents peintres et graveurs, toute la pléiade des Maîtres français.

Au point de vue industriel : La merveilleuse réunion, dans un seul ouvrage, de tous les progrès réalisés dans la fabrication du livre de grand luxe.

SIR WALTER BESANT.

It is with much regret that we have to record the death of Sir Walter Besant, which took place on Sunday last at his house at Hampstead. Sir Walter's health had not been good for some time past, but a fatal termination was quite unexpected until the last few weeks. It is an added grief to the sorrow-stricken family that Sir Walter's two sons are both away in South Africa; both are soldiers and at the front with Lord Kitchener.

Sir Walter, who was the third son of Mr. William Besant, of Southsea, was born at Portsmouth in 1838, and educated at King's College, London, and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in high mathematical honours. He was intended for the Church, but abandoned this career. He was then appointed Senior Professor in the Royal College of Mauritius, but was compelled by ill-health to resign, and returned to England, where he has since resided.

It would be absurd to refer in our columns to the death of such a popular author and popular man too as Sir Walter Besant and ignore the position which he so long held as the champion of discontented authors—people with real or fancied grievances.

We are quite ready to admit that there was room for improvement, and that improvement has taken place in the business relations between authors and publishers, and we should be the last to deny that some of this improvement has been due to the writing and preaching of Sir Walter Besant. On the other hand, it would be idle to deny that the late President of the Society of Authors went too far—much too far in his sweeping denunciations of and accusations against publishers as a body. As a body, we assert unhesitatingly that publishers are as little deserving of the abuse heaped upon them by Sir Walter Besant as any other section of the community that he could have selected, the Law and the Church included.

We regret with the many thousands of his admirers that we shall have no more brilliant novels from his tireless pen; we regret the loss to the country of one who so unselfishly and devotedly worked for the benefit of the poorer classes, not only in London, but throughout the country; and we also regret that Sir Walter did not live long enough to outlive his prejudices, one might fairly say his enmity, against publishers. That he did them harm is certain; that they can afford to overlook it in face of the services he rendered to his country is also certain.

GUIDE-BOOKS—A SUGGESTION.

The most interesting recent event in Guide-Book history is undoubtedly the transfer of the great series of 'Murray's Guides' from the house of Mr. Murray, with which they have so long been connected, to that of Mr. Edward Stanford, in whose hands we have no doubt they will 'go on and prosper,' especially as Mr. Stanford's main business is supplying the wants of travellers.

Murray's 'Greece,' published in 1834, was, we believe, one of the first, if not the first, of the long series of the firm's 'Hand-books for Travellers,' so that it is not too much to say that they have directed the steps and informed the minds of generations of English-speaking travellers.

It has often struck us as curious that, considering the great interest our people take in sport of all kinds—shooting, fishing, hunting, &c.—that the writers of guide-books as a rule devote such meagre space to information on these points, often enough none at all.

In view of the competition of German guides like Baedeker's—which are printed in English, and are formidable competitors in every way—it surely would be good policy on the part of producers of guides in this country to give reliable up-to-date information as to the nature of the sport to be had in foreign countries and in different parts of our own empire. And not only should this be done in the case of places abroad; all guides to counties and towns and local districts would have their field of usefulness greatly enlarged by the addition of reliable information supplied by someone with local knowledge as well as with knowledge of the particular kind of sport to be had in a district. That such information is so rarely to be found is doubtless because the editors or compilers are not sportsmen themselves; but publishers of guides would do well to bear our suggestion in mind—it would unquestionably add to the value of their properties.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

British and Irish and American book-sellers having customers who buy superb éditions de luxe should note the advertisement in our pages this week of the French 'National' edition of the Works of Victor Hugo. Messrs. Bernoux, Cumin & Masson, of Lyons, have expended more than three million francs in the production of this edition. They also announce the complete works of Molière.

A new volume by Prof. Skeat, entitled 'Notes on English Etymology' will be issued shortly from the Oxford University Press. The book contains an introduction of an autobiographical kind, and a reproduction of the portrait presented by subscription to Christ's College, Cambridge, of which the author is Fellow. Most of the pages are made up of reprints of stray articles, and the whole may be described as a companion volume to 'A Student's Pastime.'

The volume of the 'Cambridge Natural History' dealing with Amphibia and Reptiles is now published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It is written by Dr. Hans Gadow, Strickland Curator at Cambridge, and addresses itself at once to the field-naturalist and to the morphologist—pre-supposing, therefore, a certain acquaintance with the rudiments of anatomy. Numerous drawings on wood have been made for the book by Miss M. E. Durham, mostly from living specimens.

Following hard upon the news of their forthcoming Library Edition of Hazlitt, Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. now announce that they have in preparation an important new edition of 'Boswell's Life of Samuel Johnson,' in three large volumes. A Topographical Introduction will be furnished by Mr. Austin Dobson, who, since it was first made known to him, has been good enough to show great interest in the venture, and has given his assistance in the choice of illustrations. The edition will be edited by Mr. Arnold Glover, who will also contribute notes and index. In the illustrations an attempt will be made to ensure a lasting record of the fast-disappearing localities connected with Johnson and his times by means of a series of nearly 100 drawings by Mr. Herbert Railton, based on such localities as still exist and on old topographical engravings. The volumes will also be illustrated with a series of photogravure portraits of Johnson and his contemporaries. There will also be a limited large-paper edition, a special feature of which will be a series of thirty portraits of Boswell, Johnson, and their contemporaries, reproduced in tinted photogravure.

Although 'The Book Plate Society' did not immediately follow up the completion of the first volume of its organ, 'The Book of Book Plates,' by the issue of a second, that dainty quarterly is not in fact defunct. Part 1 of Volume II. will be issued next week by Mr. Brimley Johnson in conjunction with Messrs. Schulze & Co., of Edinburgh.

Mr. Brimley Johnson has also taken over the publication of Mr. Arthur Rickett's 'Lost Chords,' a volume of parodies on the same lines as his new volume, 'Mimes and Rhymes.'

* *

Mr. Winston Churchill's new novel, 'The Crisis,' is a very remarkable study of the effects of civil war. His hero is a Northerner who has taken up work in St. Louis just at the moment when passion began to run high on the question of Secession; and his heroine, Virginia Carvel (a descendant of the Dorothy who figured in 'Richard Carvel'), is the only daughter of a Southern magnate. But in a sense the central personage of the book is Abraham Lincoln, who, strongly and even crudely drawn, represents to Mr. Churchill the incarnate type of the young nation.

'Surrey,' the third volume of Dent's County Guides, is to be published immediately. The book will be modelled on the much-commended plan of the Hampshire and Norfolk guides published last summer. The story and scenery of Surrey will be chronicled in a series of seven itineraries by Mr. Walter Jerrold, who has also compiled an exhaustive gazetteer. Articles on the natural history and sports of the county are contributed as follows: Birds, by J. A. Bucknill, M.A.; Flowers, by Edward Step, F.L.S.; Entomology, by Rev. J. Vernon; Geology, by Prof. E. Hull, LL.D.; and a chapter on Cycling in Surrey, with a series of routes, by Duncan Tovey. Sectional plans accompany the itineraries, and there is a county map.

Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., are just publishing in their Library of Useful Stories 'The Story of Wild Flowers,' by Prof. G. Henslow. The author does not aim merely at adding a new text-book on Structural Botany, but endeavours to add something additional by putting life into those dry bones of mere structure. Every plant has a history, and evolution teaches us that besides carrying an hereditary likeness it has the power within itself of varying, provided its external conditions are changed. The living bond, therefore, which unites the author's chapters together is the principle of evolution. Prof. Henslow deals not only with Wild Flowers and Vegetables in the fields and forests, but also with their cultivated descendants in our gardens and greenhouses, their native lands, and the date of their arrival into these islands.

All interested in the sale by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge of the Barrois collection from the Ashburnham Library will find a very full report in the Standard. From the account of the first day's sale on June 11 we give this extract:—

The first sensation was created by a vellum MS. of the Fifteenth Century, consisting of 115 folios, written in French, relating to the Count d'Artois and his wife and son, the Comte de Boulogne. There were 84 finely painted and illuminated miniatures, four and five inches square, representing costumes in civil and military life, as well as domestic scenes, battles, sieges, and tournaments. The initial letters contained many grotesque figures, and in the marginal decorations were flower scrolls, birds, and beasts, all beautifully drawn. Bidding began at £84, or £1 for each of the miniatures. Before long the contest lay between Quaritch, of London, Belin and Masson, of Paris, and Rosenthal and Halle, of Munich. Finally, M. Belin became the purchaser for £455. A still more exciting struggle took place for the possession of a vellum MS., of 35 folios, of the Fifteenth Century, containing 136 incidents, each with a tinted drawing. This remarkable book is written and illustrated in the manner in which the ancient Netherlands block-books were afterwards produced. The drawings, which occupy 34 leaves, represent incidents in the life of St. Augustine, from the marriage of his parents, Patricius and Monica, to the Papal recognition of his Order. In the colouring of the drawings brown, green, purple, and yellow have been used, all of which are undimmed. Biddings began at £24, and for some time many English buyers were competitors; but when the figures ran into threes there only remained Mr. Quaritch and Rosenthal, of Munich, and the most animated bidding proceeded, until the latter, at £655, threw down his pencil, and Mr. Quaritch became the possessor of the Augustine.

Among the items disposed of at the third day's sale was what Mr. Hodge, jun., described as the most gloriously decorated book ever on sale. This was a 'Hore Beate Mariæ Virginis cum Calendario,' a work of the Fifteenth Century, and a magnificent specimen of the highest style of a French illuminator's art. There were 225 pages full of charming illustrations. The first offer was £300, and Mr. Harding became the owner for £1,160. Two large folio volumes in vellum of the Fifteenth Century, containing 337 pages, told the ancient history of the world in a series of paintings, nine inches by eight. Amongst these are Noah leaving the Ark and building a city, King Priam and Helen, Conquests of the Trojans, the Building of the Tower of Babel, and the Siege of Jerusalem. There are eight smaller miniatures, 4 in. by 3½ in., representing scenes in the life of Christ. Biddings began at £300, and the volumes finally fell to the bid of Mr. Quaritch for £1,420. Continental buyers did not carry much away with them.

The third volume of 'American History told by Contemporaries,' edited for the Macmillan Company by Prof. A. B. Hart, is now ready. It covers the period from 1783-1845.

'From a notice on the fly-leaf of Mr. Robert Cromie's "Kitty's Victoria Cross," which Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. have just published, we learn that a new edition of Mr. Cromie's "A Plunge into Space" is in the press. The latter will contain twenty illustrations by Mr. Lancelot Speed. Among the many claims to prophecy made by authors—some of which are a trifle shadowy—we may instance Mr. Cromie's wireless telegraphy forecast in "A Plunge into Space," the first edition of which was published in 1890. Tesla and Marconi had not then commenced to work their wonders, but Mr. Cromie's paragraph—which will appear in the new edition without the alteration of a single word—has been admitted by an electrical science journal to be a fairly good definition of wireless telegraphy up to the moment of going to press.'—Author.

'The Book of the Cheese, being Traits and Stories of "Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese," Wine Office Court, Fleet Street,' is announced for early publication by Mr. Fisher Unwin. The introduction says: 'The history of the inn is in no small degree the literary history of England. The "Cheshire Cheese" is the last link between present-day journalism and the time of Johnson and going back to Dryden and Chaucer.'

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing at the price of 1s. the Book of Psalms, from Mr. C. G. Montefiore's edition of the Bible for home reading. The work is of course designed for the use of Jewish parents and children.

'The Early Stars,' by Albert Kinross, which has already met with a large sale in America, will be published in England by Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith. Mr. Kinross's last book, 'An Opera and Lady Grasmere,' after appearing in America and in the Tauchnitz series, is now being translated into German and Italian.

The British Empire Review for June has a charming portrait of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra; and an article on 'Copyright and the Colonies,' by Mr. G. Herbert Thring.

* *

The Humanitarian for June has an interesting paper on 'The Death Penalty,' by Dr. R. E. Dudgeon, from which we take the concluding lines: 'The retention of the death penalty in our criminal code is abhorrent to all who regard death as the natural, proper, and acceptable termination of life. To the sense of every rational being, it is absurd to pretend, as the law does, that death is a punishment. As Young says:

'Death is the crown of life;

Were death deny'd, poor men would live in vain;

Were death deny'd, to live would not be life;

Were death deny'd, e'en fools would wish to die.'

The next addition to the Temple Classics will be Kinglake's 'Eothen,' edited by W. H. D. Rouse, M.A., with a photogravure frontispiece from a picture by the author.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week 'Beauty Adorned,' by Mrs. Humphry ('Madge' of Truth). The title is sufficiently explanatory to make much comment superfluous.

'The Cardinal's Rose,' by Van Tassel Sutphen, recently published by Harper & Brothers, has gone into a second edition in this country, while on the other side of the Atlantic the book is being reprinted for the ninth time. It is now to be translated into German.

The index to the first ten volumes of 'Book Prices Current,' which has been in course of compilation for some time, is now completed, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock very shortly. The index is so arranged that under any one author's name all the copies of his works sold during the decade are brought together, and their varying prices and states are seen at one view. The work contains in all 33,000 distinct titles and over 500,000 references; Shakespeare alone having over 1,100.

Cosmo Hamilton has just published his smart 'Impertinent Dialogues,' in Arrow-smith's 3s. 6d. series.

Mr. S. R. Crockett's new novel, 'Cinderella,' will be published June 25, by Messrs. James Clarke & Co.

Rhoda Broughton's capital novel 'Joan' has been produced at sixpence by Messrs. Macmillan.

A sixpenny edition of John Oliver Hobbes's brilliant book 'A Bundle of Life' will be issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

A new book of stories by W. D. Howells is announced by Harper & Brothers. The volume contains 'A Pair of Patient Lovers,' 'The Pursuit of the Piano,' 'A Circle in the Water,' 'The Magic of a Voice,' and 'A Different Case,' and will be published under the title of the first named, 'A Pair of Patient Lovers.' Mr. Howells's reminiscences, 'Literary Friends and Acquaintance,' which were published a few weeks ago, have already called for four editions in England and America. The same firm announce 'Westerfelt,' by W. H. Harben, a novel of modern American life.

The first June number of La Revue de Paris, published here by Mr. Fisher Unwin, contains an important article by Dr. Theodor Barth entitled 'Les Agrariens de l'Allemagne nouvelle.' Also 'La Vie en torpilleur,' by Lieutenant X; 'L'Éducation nouvelle,' by Ernest Lavisse; and 'Les Salons de 1901,' by Romain Rolland, are among the special articles in this number.

TRADE CHANGES.

Mr. Stanley J. Killby, of Messrs. Darter Bros. & Walton, Cape Town, has taken an office at 5 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C. All communications respecting The South African Educator should in future be directed to that address.

Messrs. H. R. Hill & Son, of 1 Booksellers' Row, Strand, will remove on June 25 to 61 New Oxford Street, in consequence of the Strand improvements.

THE INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS' CONGRESS AT LEIPZIG.

When at the International Congress of Publishers held in London in June 1899, under the presidency of Mr. John Murray, an invitation was given by Herr Albert Brockhaus, on behalf of Germany, that the next Congress of the Association should be held in Leipzig, it was felt that no more fitting place could possibly have been selected. Accordingly, in that town during the past week the fourth International Congress has been holding its meetings from June 9 to 13 under the presidency of Herr Albert Brockhaus. The proceedings were inaugurated by a reception by the President at his residence, 17 Solomonstrasse, at which nearly 300 members attended, representatives from the Far East, America, as well as most of the Continental nations being present. London was represented by Messrs. John Murray, F. Macmillan, W. Heinemann, R. T. Wright (Cambridge University), T. F. Unwin, T. Houlston, F. J. Cross (Cassell & Co.), G. Duckworth, W. Gay, J. Shaylor (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.), H. Grevel, G. Williams (Williams & Norgate); China and Japan by Mr. T. Brown. The following were amongst the most important members representing the Continental publishers:—MM. F. Brunetiere, R. Fourret, L. Layus, P. Ollendorff, W. Hoepli, E. Bruylant, O. Forst, K. C. Engelhorn, K. W. Hiersemann, J. Hoffmann, H. Meyer, and Dr. K. Trübner; America being represented by Messrs. D. C. Heath and G. Haven Putnam.

The business of the Congress opened with the delivery, by Herr Albert Brockhaus, of the presidential address, which was as follows:—

'Gentlemen!—In the name of the Organising Committee, in the name of the Börsenverein der Deutschen Buchhändler, in the name of all German publishers, I bid you heartily welcome to the chief centre of the German book trade.

'I need scarcely mention to you the tasks which Congresses in general, and a Publishers' Congress in particular, have set before them.

'The serious and friendly discussions of the Congress bring the world at large social and political advantages, and scientific and practical advancement of many kinds. I need only remind you of the Paris Congress which we have to thank for the introduction of the metric system, of the Congress which led to the Berne Convention for the protection of literary and artistic copyright, of the yearly Congresses of scientific associations, and of the Peace Conference at the Hague. For too long a time, indeed, have publishers—traders in the noblest of all wares, that of the human intellect cast in an actual and tangible form—neglected to form a creative power from their united forces, which would obtain a legitimate influence over custom and legislation and the realisation of their ideal and practical demands on the intellectual market of the world.

'That with goodwill on all sides great tasks can be performed has already been shown by our former Congresses. The exhaustive order of the day of the present Congress shows, however, that as regards authors' and publishers' copyright, as well as the routine of the book-trade, many an important matter can and must still be settled.

'For certain reasons we have this time adopted a division of the Congress into two Sections, instead of three as hitherto, and hope by this course to lighten our labours. We would ask you, if you have not already done so, to enter your names either for Section A, authors' and publishers' rights, or for Section B, administrative and purely technical questions of the book trade. We have also instituted a third Section C for the music trade, which is peculiarly fitted for the attainment of an international agreement, and which agreement we hope will be arrived at by its means. We believe that a further extension of the Congress would lead to the institution of a fourth Section for the art trade, of which the legal and trade conditions will need regulating during the next few years, not only in Germany, but in the whole civilised world, with due regard to epoch-making modern inventions and new legal standards.

'It is our great pleasure to welcome such a numerous assembly as has not been seen at any former Publishers' Congress. Four hundred members are announced for the Congress, against 215 in London, 138 in Brussels, and 200 in Paris. But we are far from ascribing this fact to any greater attraction of Germany and Leipzig. It is rather because no country in the world possesses so extensive a publishing trade as Germany, Austria, and Switzerland, or so strict an organisation of the book trade, as is to be found in the Börsenverein der Deutschen Buchhändler.

'Delighted as we are to see our invitation so generally accepted by our own countrymen, we look upon the presence among us of representatives of nearly every civilised State as a special honour. Members have been announced from Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United States.

'Particularly numerous are the associations that are represented in our labours by special delegates. You will find the names of the associations, delegates, and members in the lists of members handed to you.

'In the naming of Honorary Presidents, the Organising Committee has forestalled their election by you. The Committee begs you to assent to these elections, feeling quite sure that no better choice could have been made. They are the eminent Presidents of the Brussels and London Congresses, Messrs. Emile Bruylant, former President of the Second International Publishers' Congress, John Murray, former President of the Publishers' Association, President of the Third International Publishers' Congress, whose name is well known the whole world over, and Kommerzienrat Carl Engelhorn, until late Chief Director of the Börsenverein der Deutschen Buchhändler in Leipzig.

'Would that we could have had the pleasure of welcoming before all, among our Honorary Presidents, a genius that towers above us all, the most kindly of colleagues, our revered Georges Masson. I shall later on in his honour ask you to rise from your seats. In his place we have called upon the senior partner of the well known firm of Hachette & Co., M. René Fourret, President of the Cercle de la Librairie, President of the Syndicate of Publishers.

'Gentlemen, and dear French colleagues, before proceeding further, I have a duty to perform—the speaking of a few words to the memory of our late eminent colleague, M. Georges Masson, former President of the Cercle de la Librairie in Paris, and President of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. Gifted with an exceptional intellect, he not only carried out all the duties of his special province, but took upon himself the difficult task of studying and arriving at a thorough understanding of the book trade of the whole world. We saw, during his presidency of the first Publishers' Congress, to what point he had succeeded in comprehending the vital conditions in the relations of publisher and retailer. Not long ago in London he expressed to me his lively pleasure at being able to revisit Leipzig, a town which formed an important link in his youthful career as a bookseller, a town which he not only always held in affectionate memory, but of which he recollected the smallest details!

'Providence has decreed that we should not have the honour and pleasure of seeing him among us once more. We can only regret this, and deplore the loss of our distinguished former President, one of our most illustrious colleagues, a man of extraordinary ability, and a sincere friend.

'In memory of the deceased, I will beg you, gentlemen, to rise from your seats.

'It is in his place that we have asked Monsieur Fourret to be so kind as to make one of our Honorary Presidents.

'To show what an important place the book trade holds in the commerce of Leipzig, we have requested the President of the Chamber of Commerce also to accept the Honorary Presidentship. Herr Kommerzienrat Zweiniger has kindly complied with our wish.

'In thanking all these gentlemen for their assent to their election, I beg especially to tender my acknowledgments to the honoured Head of this town, Herr Oberbürgermeister Justizrat Dr. Tröndlin.

'Though the town of Leipzig may not be in a position to rival the capitals in which we have till now held our sittings, yet is it, for the whole world, the publishing town par excellence. And the International Publishers' Congress, in offering the Honorary Presidentship to Leipzig's Chief Burgomaster, has only performed one of the pleasant duties of brotherly intercourse.

'We are specially flattered to be able to welcome at our opening meeting a considerable number of honorary guests, representatives of intellectual Leipzig: His Magnificence the Rector of the University and the Deans of the Four Faculties, His Excellency the President of the Supreme Court of the Empire and the Attorney-General, the heads of the military, imperial, royal, and municipal authorities, the Presidents of the City Delegates and the Chamber of Commerce, the Consuls of those countries where the previous Congresses were held, and other distinguished gentlemen.

'But first among the Honorary Members I welcome His Excellency the Royal Saxon Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Interior, Herr von Metzsch-Reichenbach, who is kind enough to testify to the International Publishers' Congress, by his presence, the interest taken by the Government of this country in our labours and our objects.

'The presence of this gentleman bears all the more significance, as the realisation of a large part of the labours of the Congress requires the goodwill of the Government. Let us hope that the Congresses will always perform such earnest and irrefragable work, that the Governments will readily assist us in the alteration of existing conventions or in the conclusion of new commercial treaties.'

Following the delivery of the address, speeches of great warmth were given, welcoming the members to Leipzig, by the Saxon Minister of Foreign Affairs, Herr Zweiniger, President of the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. Tröndlin, the chief Burgomaster of Leipzig.

The reading of papers and the discussion upon them commenced at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, many being of a very technical character and directly affecting the Continental publishers only; those of a more general interest are summarised below. It may, however, interest our readers to give a complete list of the papers set down for discussion in Sections A and B:—

Section A.—Authors' and Publishers' Rights.

The copyright relations between the United States of America and the European States.—Report by Herr Kommerzienrat Dr. Karl Trübner, Strassburg. Seconded by Mr. Frederick Macmillan, London.

Holland's attitude towards the German copyright law in connection with the Berne Convention.—

Report by Herr Otto Mühlbrecht, Berlin. Seconded by Mons. Paul Ollendorff, Paris. Supplementary note on the Dutch Belgian Convention on copyright by Mons. Ernest Vandeveld, Brussels.

Austria-Hungary and the Berne Convention.—Report by Herr Franz Deuticke, Vienna. Seconded by Herr Arnold Huber, Frauenfeld.

Russia and the Berne Convention.—Report by Herr Joseph Blažek, St. Petersburg.

Extension of international copyright protection.—Report by Herr Director Fritz Schwartz, Munich. Seconded by Mr. William Heinemann, London.

The need for more complete protection of copyright in educational works.—Report by Mr. D. C. Heath, Boston. Seconded by Mons. Alfred Cornelis-Lebègue, Brussels.

Section B.—Book-Trade.

The relations between authors and publishers on the one part, and the Daily Press on the other with regard to reviews.—Report by Herr Paul Ollendorff, Paris.

Import duty on books considered with reference to new commercial treaties (with a table).—Report by Herr Dr. Alfred Giesecke, Leipzig. Seconded by Herr Emilio Treves, Milan.

The publisher's interests and the published price.—Report by Herr Dr. Wilhelm Ruprecht, Göttingen. Seconded by Mons. H. Le Soudier, Paris.

The system of sending books on sale or return.—

Report by Mr. William Heinemann, London.

Seconded by Herr Th. Lambrechts, Christiania.

Special libraries of the book trade and allied industries and their international intercourse.—

Report by Herr Otto Harrassowitz, Leipzig. Seconded by Herr Wouter Nijhoff, The Hague.

The Permanent Bureau of the International Publishers' Congresses.—Report by Herr Hermann Credner, Leipzig. Seconded by Mr. John Murray, London.

In Section A the most interesting paper was that by Dr. K. Trübner on 'The Copyright Relations between the United States of America and the European States,' in which Dr. Trübner reviewed the conditions existing before the passing of the American Copyright Act in 1891, and also pointed out how many hardships still existed, and for which a remedy should be found. Mr. G. H. Putnam stated that he hoped before the end of the year that Congress would pass an Act by which all Continental nations would secure copyright in America by depositing at Washington two copies of any book issued in Europe within thirty days of its publication, and if reprinted in America within twelve months copyright would be secured. It was generally agreed that this would be a great concession, but not all that was sufficient. Eventually the following resolution was adopted that—

'1. This Congress resolves that its deliberations on the subject of the Copyright relations between the United States of America and European States be arranged by the Permanent Bureau in the form of a Memorandum which shall be submitted to the European and American Governments and that our American colleagues be requested to communicate the same to the Typographical Union.

'2. Further, while hoping to see the United States of America join the Berne Convention in the near future, the Congress expresses its most earnest desire that the amendment to the law of March 3, 1891, as proposed by the Copyright League, should be accepted by Congress, with the object of increasing the protection accorded to foreign works.'

In Section B, Mr. W. Heinemann's paper on 'The System of Sending Books on Sale or Return,' attracted the most attention. Mr. Heinemann did not entirely advocate this system, it was more of an enquiry as to how far it was a salutary one, and how far the interests of booksellers were served thereby. He stated that as a general rule books are supplied to the retail trade on sale or return in both France and Germany, and, while recognising its drawbacks, he was not convinced that it could not be advantageously adopted in other countries. An interesting discussion followed Mr. Heinemann's paper, and the following resolution was presented to the meeting: 'That it is advisable that the principle of supplying books on sale or of selling them outright should if possible be uniform in all countries, so that certain regulations should be drawn up by an international commission, which would be as far as possible binding on the organisations taking part in the International Congresses, and through them on their members.'

It would be quite impossible to adequately describe the almost regal welcome which has been given by the town and trade of Leipzig to the members attending the Congress. Never, perhaps, will those who attended the dinner given by the 'Börsenverein' forget the enthusiasm which marked the proceedings; members apparently vying with each other as to who could give the most heartiness to the proceedings. The menu and programmes were quite works of art. Each day only still further developed the thoroughness of the organisation and the literary good-fellowship which marked the whole arrangements at this Congress. A word may also be said for the comfort and convenience with which the route to the Continent is now surrounded; nothing could be more picturesque and agreeable than the Great Eastern Railway's new route via Harwich and the Hook of Holland to all parts of Northern Europe.

'THE CUMULATIVE BOOK INDEX.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to explain a few points suggested by your kind mention of the Cumulative Index in your number for April 13. The Index is cumulated each month during the year, but we call the final number of the year the Cumulated Index. The running head should perhaps be changed.

The month and date in the record of the Annual American Catalog is the date of the weekly number in which the completed entry may be found, and not the month of publication. In the C.B.I. annual and in all the cumulative numbers the complete entry is always reprinted, and the last number is the only one used at any time during the entire year. The annual number is simply one monthly number of the year, and is included with subscriptions at three dollars a year.

You are quite mistaken in ascribing the increased number of books recorded by us to the inclusion of periodicals. We do not include periodicals and we do not know that we include a wider field than our contemporaries, but we do claim to cover the same field more thoroughly.

It seems hardly fair to compare pages of the whole American Catalog with our number of pages for two reasons: (1) the author entries are repeated in the two alphabets; (2) the type used is much larger. We enclose a comparative statement which is, we believe, on a fair basis. This comparison is made with the annual summary number of the P.W., and not with the American Catalog, which is a separate publication.

Very truly yours,

Minneapolis: H. W. WILSON.
May 20, 1901.

[We are well aware that the 'month and date in the record of the Annual American Catalog is the date of the weekly number in which the complete entry may be found,' but that month is also in most cases the month in which the book was published. Mr. Wilson writes: 'We do not include periodicals'; probably he means monthly periodicals, we were referring to yearly ones. We are obliged to Mr. Wilson for sending a comparison between his comprehensive and valuable publication and the 'summary number of the P.W.'; but one of the books we were reviewing on April 13 was the Annual American Catalog, and not the 'summary number of the P.W.' (Publishers' Weekly), which the same firm had published some time before. If in doing so we hurt Mr. Wilson's feelings we are sorry, for he is doing an admirable work, and we hope some English booksellers will be among his supporters, as many American booksellers must be.—Ed. ROBERT BUCHANAN,

AUTHOR, DRAMATIST, AND PUBLISHER OF HIS OWN WRITINGS.

After some months of illness Mr. Robert Buchanan died at Streatham on June 10. As a poet he is one of the few of the moderns who have any chance of living long into the future.

How he came to London and commenced his chequered literary career at 66 Stamford Street, Blackfriars, was related by himself in M.A.P. as follows:

'It was in the summer of 1860 that I, a lad still in my teens, came to London to seek my fortune. My companion in that wild search should have been a youth some years older than myself, David Gray, whose acquaintance I had made when I was a student at Glasgow University. By some fatality we missed each other, and travelled apart on separate lines of railway; and it was some weeks before I discovered my friend, in a wretched lodging near the Borough. Before I met him he had received his death-blow through exposure; he had spent a night in Hyde Park, had caught cold, and received the seeds of the cruel disease from which he died soon afterwards, and to which he had an hereditary predisposition. Gray finally returned to his humble home in Scotland, where he died, leaving me to fight the battle of life alone.

'To me, who still survive, the recollection of these early days in London seems, at this distance of time, only a kind of wild dream; but I can see the ghastly "garret" still, and poor Gray stretched on the bed, or sitting up in a fanciful old dressing-gown which I had given to him, still hopeful, still full of feverish plans and aspirations, still not realising that he was doomed to die. He had kindly visitors from time to time—Milnes himself, Laurence Oliphant, Charles Mackay, and others; so that he was not quite desolate. When he departed, and I was left to my own devices, I myself was desolate indeed. The man who has not lived in London all alone, without a relation or a friend, scarcely knows what loneliness is. For day after day, for week after week, for month after month, I dwelt by myself in the "dear old, ghastly, bankrupt garret," as David Gray had christened it, and the only human soul with whom I exchanged a word, with the exception of the one or two strangers on whom I called when seeking for employment, was the dragged maid-of-all-work who attended upon me and the other lodgers, scarcely one of whom I knew even by sight.

'I had no companions, I had not even an acquaintance, save Hepworth Dixon, of the Athenæum, from whom I carefully concealed my poverty and terrible isolation, and whom I saw at intervals in his editorial office in Wellington Street, Strand. A little later on I introduced myself to W. G. Wills, of All the Year Round, and to John Morley, then a boy like myself, and editing the Literary Gazette, and still later I made the acquaintance, at the General Post Office, of Edmund Yates, who was sub-editing Temple Bar; but in reality these men were strangers to me.'

The following account of Mr. Buchanan is from 'Who's Who':—

BUCHANAN, Robert, author, dramatist, and publisher of his own writings; b. Caverswall, Staffordshire, 18 Aug. 1841; o. s. of Robert Buchanan, socialist, missionary, and journalist, and Margaret Williams, of Stoke-upon-Trent. Educ.: Glasgow Academy and High School; Glasgow University. Came to London from Scotland in 1860, and has since then been journalist, novelist, and dramatist; passing part of the time in Scotland and Ireland; visited America in 1880. Publications: Poems, including London Poems, 1866; Book VERSES EVOLVED FROM A 'P. C.' SUGGESTION.

['What an opening for an inventor who can make nice white paper again of the tons which are now so gaily and daily spoiled by printer's ink! '—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.]

'O dainty paper, virgin white,
Whereon the "copy" that I write
Appears in murky stain,
Which to produce, with moderate skill
In quantities immoderate, still
I rack a jaded brain;

'Alas!—to check my swelling pride—
How soon shall you be cast aside!
While from your surface fair
Ingenious inventors try
To purge away the inky dye,
And make you as your were.

'Till this solution comes in sight,
Whereas they pay us now to write
(And often "utter rot," too),
A better way 'twould be, by far,
Paper, to leave you as you are,
And henceforth—pay us not to.'—World.

HOW TO TREAT YOUR PUBLISHER.

'Certainly they did it better formerly. On this score "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days" affords conclusive evidence. Mr. E. Marston (Sampson Low) writes this cheery little book about his predecessors in his most lucrative calling.

'He begins with Jacob Tonson (1656-1736), who published Dryden's translation of Virgil. Serious financial differences ensued between poet and publisher. On one occasion Tonson having refused to advance money the poet sent him the following triplet, with the significant message: "Tell the dog that he who wrote these lines can write more":

With leering looks, Bull-faced, and freckled fair,
With two left legs and Judas-coloured hair, and a third line, even more impolite.'—Daily Mail.

THE RAILWAYS AND NEWSPAPER RATES.

The Newspaper Railway Rates Reduction Association met on June 5 at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, and decided to embody the following points in a petition to the railway companies:—

'That an equalised through rate beyond the fifty-mile radius be charged, and that the system existing on some of the Scotch and southern lines of a uniform charge for any distance be generally adopted; that such through rate be fixed at $\frac{1}{4}$ d. per pound beyond fifty miles from any centre, the rate within the fifty-mile radius to remain as at present; that a satisfactory guarantee be given for goods lost or delayed in transit, and that an extension of the system giving power to senders to pay a reduced scale upon a number of parcels sent in bulk by one sender be granted.'

PREACHERS AND HOSPITAL SUNDAY.

From a belief in the vitalising influence of a preacher who speaks from personal observation, we would urge every clergyman and minister of religion who will occupy a pulpit on Hospital Sunday, 1901, to make a point of visiting either the London Hospital, Whitechapel, or Guy's Hospital, which is close to London Bridge Station, before Sunday the 16th instant. Dr. Perry, of Guy's Hospital, and Mr. G. Q. Roberts, of the London Hospital, would extend a hearty welcome to every such visitor, and we would suggest that each preacher and pressman should see for himself the casualty department, so that he may understand the work done there, the photographing and Roentgen rays rooms, the Finsen light room, and that a careful inspection should also be made of one or two of the renovated wards. If circumstances should prevent a visit to either of the two hospitals mentioned, then let the preacher or pressman call at the hospital which is nearest to him in his own district and ask the authorities there to show him such portions of the institution as will give him an insight into its actual work and progress. Then the hospitals will undoubtedly reap a golden harvest by the united efforts of the preachers and Press in the cause of suffering humanity, and worthily commemorate the first Hospital Sunday of the Twentieth Century.

ANOTHER 'TATLER' COMING.

Another sixpenny illustrated newspaper is to appear in about a month. It is the second project of the company which owns the Sphere. The new venture, however, is to be on totally different lines from that periodical. It is to be a journal of society and the stage, with the title of the Tatler, and, like the Sphere, will have Mr. Clement Shorter as editor. It will be issued on Wednesday each week.

We think Mr. Shorter is a bold man to take up the old Tatler title—not quite a happy one, we fear, for many a paper with it has died almost before it was born; it is a trifle too old-maidish for this age.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Trooper 8008, I.Y.' by the Hon. Sidney Peel. A very enjoyable volume. Not only are the author's experiences interesting in themselves, but the pleasant, candid manner of their telling adds greatly to their attraction. We are privileged to see the life of an ordinary trooper in the Imperial Yeomanry from the time of enrolment through the many exciting events that befell his company on march and in camp until Mr. Peel, after being unfortunately invalidated for a considerable time in hospital, returned to this country. It would be impossible, of course, in a short notice to refer to all the more interesting portions of the book, but one or two of the author's observations may at least be mentioned. Patriotism, he thinks, had little to do with the ready formation of this Yeomanry corps, the great majority being influenced by a chance of emigration at Government expense, love of sport and excitement, a desire to get out of the country (presumably from creditors and other unfortunate persons), and the force of imitation. Most of the recruits had never fired a rifle in their lives, and strangely enough were afforded no opportunity of doing so until they met the enemy in the field. 'The one piece of drill which we thoroughly mastered was standing at ease and standing easy; all other words of command were accompanied by a vast deal of whispered discussion in the ranks as to their meaning.' Yet these volunteers, obtained from all classes, barristers, solicitors, blacksmiths, cooks, bankers, farmers, schoolmasters, architects, butchers, drapers, men of all professions and trades, and of none, made an exceedingly efficient body of soldiers when they had got out to the seat of war and had had some practical experience. It would perhaps be as well, however, not to repeat the experiment with a different enemy. Mr. Peel testifies to the reports spread among the Boers of the outrages that would be committed by the British soldiers. The inhabitants of places they visited expressed surprise that no damage had been done, and could hardly believe it, considering the stories they had previously heard. The experiences of the Yeomanry at Lindley are, of course, especially interesting in view of subsequent events. Mr. Peel has something to say about this, but we must refer the reader to the book itself for his opinion. Altogether he seems to have spent an arduous but thoroughly invigorating time, and is most enthusiastic in his appreciation of the good luck that befell him in obtaining such a valuable experience. 'I would not have missed the months during which I wore Her Majesty's uniform for anything in the world,' he exclaims. The volume is illustrated with a number of illustrations taken from photographs, and there is also a map.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Lectures on the History of Physiology during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries,' by Sir Michael Foster, K.C.B., M.P., M.D. In these lectures, which were delivered at the Cooper Medical College in San Francisco during the autumn of 1900, Professor Foster does not claim to have given a complete history of physiology, even within the period to which he has limited himself. What he has done is to choose certain phases of his subject which seemed important and striking; and in recounting the beginnings and progress of physiology he has interwoven with his narrative the stories of the personal lives of the men who were chiefly instrumental in promoting the development of the various branches. Thus Harvey is associated with the circulation of the blood, Malpighi with the physiology of glands and tissues, Van Helmont with the rise of chemical physiology, Sylvius and his pupils with the physiology of digestion, and so forth. The opening lecture treats of 'Vesalius, his Forerunners and Followers,' and it at once catches the attention of the reader, and places him in an appreciative mood for the enjoyment of subsequent chapters. Possibly to the majority of medical experts the most attractive portion of the book will be that which treats of later advances in physiology as particularly exemplified in the departments of digestion and respiration. There is also much that is noteworthy in regard to the older doctrines of the nervous system. But the entire volume is one that the professional man and student may pleasurably linger over, and from which they are certain to derive both interesting and valuable information.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited. 'Cassell's Dictionary of Gardening': an illustrated encyclopædia of practical horticulture for all classes, edited by Walter P. Wright. Under this title the publishers are issuing a new work intended for professional and amateur gardeners, the first part of which now lies before us. An examination of its pages shows that it is of a thoroughly practical character, clearly written and beautifully illustrated, and it should undoubtedly prove of great service to the large and rapidly increasing body of horticulturalists. The work will be completed, it is anticipated, in about twenty parts, and with each instalment a coloured plate is presented. The general production and printing of the serial call for the warmest praise.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.—'Francis and Dominic and the Mendicant Orders,' by John Heckless, D.D. This volume is scarcely less interesting than any of its predecessors in 'The World's Epoch-makers' series, though the influence of St. Francis and St. Dominic may have been scarcely so marked in the world's history. That the rise of the Mendicants produced a distinct religious revival is, however, unquestionable, and the account of how this rise came about is described by Dr. Heckless in a way that can scarcely fail to hold the attention of the reader. The later chapters of the volume, which are perhaps the most interesting, are devoted to a discussion of 'The Mendicants and the Inquisition,' 'The Mendicants and Scholasticism,' and 'The Degradation of the Orders;' but the entire work is one of great interest, coupled with literary ability and theological insight.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Asinette: a French Story for English Children,' by Mrs. J. G. Fraser. It is rather a good idea of the authoress of this volume to make children teach children, for that is what it really amounts to. The adventures of Raoul and Marguerite in their mischief-loving tendencies are just of such a character as will warmly enlist the sympathy and interest of little people on this side of the Channel, and we may be sure that once having cultivated an acquaintance with French child life the study of the language will come very much easier on account of the attractive nature of the subject. For the purpose of helping the youthful pupil a lengthy vocabulary—which practically amounts to a dictionary—is included; while to render matters even still more pleasant and easy Mr. H. M. Brock has added some two hundred text illustrations, which are admirably explanatory in themselves. Little boys and girls who can learn their French through such a captivating medium as this should consider themselves most remarkably lucky. Possibly, however, they will never give a thought to the matter.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Burden of Honour,' by R. St. J. Corbet. A readable story, but not in any way exciting. The heroine is a young woman who has a strong dislike for the 'goody-goody,' and, as one of the characters puts it, prefers 'the sinful saint to the saintly sinner.' At first the reader is led to suspect that the good man of the story will wear down her prejudices, and show that though not guilty of any of her much venerated delinquencies, he is yet a being who can inspire a strong affection; but this is not so, and we are consequently saved a stereotyped ending. The book has many good points, but is deficient in incident.

From Mr. H. J. Drane.—'Friend or Foe,' by E. Simonet Thompson. Such experiences as befell the hero of this story are interesting to read of, but it may be hoped do not often occur to visitors of the Emerald Isle. Vere Knightly first meets Frances Power on a jaunting car, is attracted by her appearance and good looks, and subsequently discovers that she is madly loved by the friend with whom he is going to stay, Robert Sheil. The latter's method of wooing is undoubtedly rough and scarcely to the liking of the young lady, who soon entertains a partiality for Vere. Such disturbances as seem indigenous to the soil of Ireland bring matters to a climax, and Robert is accused of an attempt on the life of his rival. From this he is happily acquitted, and subsequently exhibits a nobler spirit. The story is not remarkable for any great skill or close observation of character, but nevertheless presents several aspects of Irish life in rather an interesting light.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Joan of Arc,' by L. Petit de Julleville, translated by Hester Davenport. This volume in 'The Saints' series gives a concise and interesting history of Joan of Arc and the military and political events in which she was involved. The book is intended to be a study of Joan's character, and it shows very vividly the highly imaginative side of her temperament. It is a sad story, and nothing could be more painful than the account of the poor martyr's death at the stake, but it also conveys many useful lessons.

From Julius Groos's Verlag, Heidelberg.—'Conversation Book in French, German, and English,' by James Connor; twelfth edition. The Gaspey-Otto-Sauer method of learning languages has gained such a world-wide reputation, in an age when the importance of acquiring a knowledge of foreign tongues is generally admitted, that it is well-nigh superfluous to dwell on the superiority of this system over so many competitors for public favour. It is right, however, to call attention to a new and carefully revised edition of the above-named book, the very practical character of the conversational exercises rendering it a most useful aid to merchants and travellers engaged in foreign trade as well as to scholars.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Harper's Monthly Magazine,' June Number. Several delicately coloured illustrations form a noticeable feature of this issue, and in the majority of instances a good artistic effect has been achieved. The drawings, however, lose something of their definiteness in the process, and the face which comes best through the ordeal is that which in its original outlines possesses a certain amount of irregularity. Summer having now reached us, fiction naturally largely predominates among the contents. There are no less than six short stories, to say nothing of serial fiction and a contribution which appears under the heading of the 'Editor's Drawer'; and the entire number, plentifully seasoned with poetry, is made as light as possible. The general articles include an interesting account of some experiences of Mr. Poultney Bigelow on the coast of Japan; a judicial summing-up of the indebtedness of the English language to King Alfred by Mr. Brander Matthews; and a further instalment of Mr. Woodrow Wilson's comments on 'Colonies and Nation.' Harper's certainly loses none of its attractiveness as it grows older.

From Messrs. Hodges, Figgis & Co., Ltd., Dublin.—'Sonnets and Songs,' by S. Charles Jellicoe. After the fashion of so many young versifiers, Mr. Jellicoe's muse is very unequal, and though he occasionally has an inspiration of genuine poetic merit, at other times he lags and stumbles in a way that is almost irritating. Such lines as

Thy smile I know, from bud to perfect blown can only provoke a smile in return, and are quite unworthy of the pen that wrote other and sometimes beautiful lines in this little volume. But we are afraid the author has yet to discipline his powers, and he should especially guard against being led away by the sound rather than the sense of what he is composing. There should be poetic thought as well as expression in the true poet's outpourings.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Aristocrats: being the Impressions of the Lady Helen Pole during her Sojourn in the Great North Woods, as spontaneously recorded in her Letters to her Friend in North Britain, the Countess of Edge and Moss.' This is a very charming volume, though we doubt whether its humour and subtle side hits will be thoroughly appreciated by all readers. Some of the characters introduced in the letters are exceedingly mirth provoking, and the tangle in which their writer eventually finds herself is most dexterously worked up to. For those who can dive beneath the surface 'The Aristocrats' will provide a fund of excellent enjoyment.

From Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh. 'Botany, Part I,' and 'Zoology, Part II,' Vertebrata, in the 'Catechism Series,' have reached us. These little manuals afford an invaluable aid to instruction, and are evidently prepared with great care. Both are usefully illustrated.

From Mr. John Long.—'Bitter Fruit,' by Mrs. Lovett Cameron. The bright vivacious style of the author is very conspicuous in her latest novel, and it may be said to be thoroughly readable from first page to last. The hero is weighted with a past, and just when he least expects it the woman whom he has thought to have dismissed from his life turns up to confront him. We cannot but think Mrs. Cameron, like so many of her sister novelists, shows an undue sympathy with her leading male character. Rightly considered he is only a poor sort of creature, but even for his failings, she seems to have a species of admiration. The good looks and gallant bearing with which he is so plentifully endowed no doubt count for much. At any rate the difficulties lying in his path are beautifully smoothed out for him at the finish, and we leave him happy in the love of the sweet lofty-minded heroine, while the unfortunate Italian girl, whose society is held to be contaminating, is luckily removed by a fire. There are one or two good character-sketches in the novel, but the romantic element is so strongly in evidence as to obscure these good points. For the majority of readers, however, romance is the most attractive feature of fiction, and it can never be too highly coloured.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'The Bible for the Young: a Series for Schools and Families,' by Rev. J. Patterson-Smyth, B.D., LL.D. What Mr. Paley would call powerful indirect evidence to the author's suitability and capacity for the work he has undertaken is afforded by the general introduction to these volumes. In this he points out with so much good judgment and enthusiasm the best methods of inculcating the truths of Scripture history in a class that it is plain his whole heart is in the task, and the valuable suggestions he makes are manifestly those of the ardent, experienced teacher and not of the mere theorist. Consequently in the volumes of this series we expect to find thoroughly practical workmanship. And in this, judging by the two issues, 'Genesis' and 'St. Matthew,' which now lie before us, we are not likely to be disappointed. Each of these volumes is excellently prepared, clear in its exposition, full of wise counsel and hints for the teacher's guidance. It is impossible, as Mr. Smyth points out, to lay down any hard and fast rule of procedure in tuition—every teacher must to a large extent be a guide to himself, modifying or expanding the material offered to him to suit his own individual gifts of expression; but it will be generally found, we think, that the course mapped out by our author is capable of close adherence. The volumes are likely to prove a great help to those engaged in religious instruction, and as spreading the facts of Christianity among the young they are bound to be of lasting service. They can be had either in paper covers or cloth bound.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—The Empire Review, edited by Mr. C. Kinloch Cooke, thoroughly maintains its high standard, and in its June issue presents an extremely varied assortment of contents. Where all the articles are of such uniform interest it is a little difficult to make any selection, but possibly 'The Education Bill of 1901,' by Sir Charles Elliott, 'Modern Chivalry,' by C. De Thierry, 'The Slave Trade in Northern Nigeria,' by T. J. Tonkin, 'Cricket Reform,' the L.B.W. Rule, by the Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, A. G. Steel, W. E. Denison, P. F. Warner, and C. I. Thornton; 'Australia's Local Forces,' by Colonel E. G. H. Bingham; and 'The British Navy,' by Lord Brassey, will attract the most attention.—Macmillan's Magazine contains an interesting article on the literary style of several of our present-day novelists, Mr. Charles Marriott and Mr. Bernard Capes being especially cited; while Mr. W. A. Dutt contributes an excellent account of 'Lavengro's Country.'—St. Nicholas, as usual, has a capital bill of fare for young people. The June number of the Century Magazine is distinguished by all those attractions of letterpress and illustration which have combined to elevate this periodical into the front rank of magazine literature. In this issue a new story by Mrs. Hodgson Burnett is begun. It is entitled 'The Making of a Marchioness.'

From the same.—'The Heroes,' by Charles Kingsley. A good book never grows old; and it is to be hoped that these Greek fairy tales, the charmingly written preface to which is dated Advent, 1855, may be read by other children for many a year to come with the same enjoyment and, let us add, with the same gratitude to their good and gifted author as must have been felt by his own children, for whom he wrote and to whom he dedicated them. The volume is legibly printed, well illustrated, and neatly bound.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Lordship of Christ, and other Sermons,' by the Rev. John H. Goodman. These sermons are fraught with sound religious teaching, and the earnest words of the preacher should carry consolation to many a perplexed mind. They are founded on a variety of Biblical texts, and treat of subjects which should be found interesting by old and young alike.

From the same.—'India in the Nineteenth Century,' by Demetrius C. Boulger. The author takes a comprehensive survey of his subject in these pages, though the treatment, speaking generally, is rather more popular than penetrative. Having described in his opening chapters the efforts made to discover a new passage to India and the subsequent conquest of the country, he next proceeds to a consideration of such interesting topics as our first Afghan wars, the wars with the Sikhs, Lord Dalhousie's government, the Indian Mutiny, the twenty years of peace, our last Afghan wars, the last five Viceroy's, and the material progress of India. He concludes his work with 'a retrospect and forecast.' In this he says: 'The Russian danger is the portentous fact which overshadows the present century, and when Russia absorbs Chinese Turkistan and brings her frontier down to the Himalayas—which is an event likely to happen before long—it will be impossible for the most wilfully blind not to see. The immediate responsibility rests on our Government to raise the Anglo-Indian garrison to the highest possible point of strength and efficiency. It will never again be safe to draw upon it for the means of meeting outside dangers, as has been done in South Africa and China. . . . India's military resources are not greater than her constant requirements, and at any moment she may be called upon to use them in her own defence.' From this quotation the reader may be able to gather the trend of Mr. Boulger's opinions, and also to form some idea of his literary capacity. The volume is supplied with several illustrations, mostly portraits, and an excellent map.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Black Wolf's Breed: a Story of France in the Old World and the New, happening in the Reign of Louis XIV.,' by Harris Dickson. The scene of the greater portion of this novel is laid in France, though the narrative opens and ends amid the wilds of Louisiana. The hero is one of those light-hearted, gallant young soldiers who so readily enlist the sympathies of the romantic. He is despatched to France by Bienville, the military governor of the territory, in order that he may acquaint the King with the great value of his American possessions and to frustrate the plots of the Spanish and mercenary Frenchmen. The mission is one requiring both courage and extreme tact, and if a large amount of luck attends the adventures of Captain Placide de Mouret it is only such as romantic fiction ever extends to the young and lion-hearted. The thread of a very pretty love-story is ingeniously interwoven into this account of thrilling episodes, and a case of misapprehension is once again used to excellent purpose. The book is remarkably lively both in its main incidents and method of narration, and will be certain to charm imaginative readers.

From the same.—'The Inner Way: being Thirty-six Sermons for Festivals,' by John Tauler, Friar Preacher of Strasburg. A new translation from the German, edited, with an introduction, by Arthur Wollaston Hutton, M.A. Messrs. Methuen's well-printed, neatly bound 'Library of Devotion' has been very appropriately enriched by this volume. On the work itself it is scarcely necessary at this hour to pass any remark, but we may say that the Rev. A. W. Hutton's introduction, in which he speaks of Tauler's life, teaching, and mysticism, is particularly interesting. Should this volume of the 'Festal Sermons' meet with a favourable reception (which we can scarcely doubt), we are given to understand that the 'Sermons for the Christian Year' may follow in two or three volumes. A better or more convenient edition could not be desired.

From the same.—'Girolamo Savonarola,' by E. L. S. Horsburgh ('Little Biographies' series). Within the narrow compass of some two hundred and odd pages the author has compressed all the material facts of Savonarola's life, and has shown with admirable clearness and ability, considering the limited space at his disposal, the general characteristics of the period at which the reformer lived, the nature of his surroundings, and the influence he wrought upon his generation. Nothing in so concise a form could have been better. The book is further distinguished by a very neat binding, some excellent printing, and sixteen illustrations, reproductions for the most part of paintings.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'Topical Teaching for Teachers and Scholars,' by W. H. Stanes. The object of this little work is to derive valuable lessons for children from simple articles they are set to make, either at home or during school hours. In this way it is hoped to impress the truths of Scripture more forcibly upon them. The book will, no doubt, prove useful, but seems just a little overweighted.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Varia: Studies and Problems of Philosophy and Ethics,' by William Knight. The contents of this volume were originally delivered as lectures to the students of philosophy at St. Andrews, but though primarily designed for those seeking Scottish academic degrees they are by no means wanting, with such emendations and revision as they have received, in those elements of interest which will render them acceptable to the world at large. Having explained the function of philosophy at the present time, Professor Knight passes to a consideration of some of the more important offshoots of the subject, discussing such topics as 'Our Present Philosophical Outlook,' 'Poetry and Science, their Contrasts and Affinities,' 'The Unseen Root of Ethics,' 'Corporate Responsibility,' 'Practical Ethics,' 'The Formation of Public Opinion,' and 'The Ethics of Criticism.' The last two articles are exceptionally interesting, and the author has much to say concerning the methods of the present-day Press with which we thoroughly agree. It is not altogether easy, however, to see where a remedy for certain abuses that have risen is to be found. With the increase in population and the spread of education a much larger body of readers has been created; and as clap-trap and superficialities possess far more attraction for such only partially awakened intellects than better balanced, more thoughtful matter would do, the very people who could do most to raise the standard of the newspaper press are the strongest influence to drag it down. Moreover, the love of social display, with the necessary wealth that shall render it possible, was never more pronounced than at the present day, and vast fortunes are to be made by encouraging the less intellectual inclinations of the masses. All these circumstances, and others which we have not space to mention, tend to the deterioration of the Press in its political, social, and literary aspects. We would refer those of our readers who are interested in the subject to a perusal of Professor Knight's work, where they will find the part taken by the newspapers in the formation of public opinion very clearly and candidly stated. Of present-day criticism the Professor has evidently a very poor opinion; but though there is much truth in what he says we cannot but think that in some of his statements he is a little too sweeping.

From Mr. John C. Nimmo.—'Two Moods of a Man,' by Violet Fane. In the first of the brightly written papers and short stories that go to make up this volume the authoress analyses—with great entertainment, we are sure, to her readers—the feelings and influences of a man who is in love as compared with similar sensations in the opposite sex; and she also shows with more or less fidelity what his thoughts and conduct are like 'when passion's trance is overpast.' The other essays are 'In Praise of Certain Book-Lists,' 'A Turkish Young Pretender,' and 'A Plea for the "Green-Eyed Monster."' The longest contribution to the book is a story, 'A Romance of Kensington Gardens,' which is related by the authoress with all her well-known vivacity and piquancy of detail. It is the account of a married lady who becomes quite fascinated by the appearance and actions of a mysterious stranger. The volume will furnish excellent amusement for the frivolous minded, who will no doubt be greatly gratified by the fragments of worldly philosophy scattered throughout its pages.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'The Romance Cycle of Charlemagne and his Peers,' by Jessie L. Weston. In this interesting discussion of the Charlemagne Romances, designed as a companion to an earlier essay by the same author on King Arthur and his Knights, Miss Weston does not attempt the impossible task of dealing so large, important, and, at least during the middle ages, so popular a body of literature as the Charlemagne cycle; but she describes its general character, notes the romances best worth the literary students' attention, and contrasts it with the Arthurian cycle. A bibliographical appendix brought up to date by Mr. Alfred Nutt greatly enhances the value of this attractive essay.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—The June Pearson's Magazine. Infinite variety is evidently what is chiefly aimed at in this periodical, and both pen and pencil are deftly wielded to win the suffrages of the reading public. Among the articles the most noticeable are 'Birds of the Beach,' by Oliver G. Pike; 'The German Emperor and his Hobbies,' by Ray Stannard Baker; 'Animals at War,' by Dr. Louis Robinson; 'The Secret Service of Philip II.' by Allen Upward; and 'Edison as a Mountain Crusher,' by Turner Morton; while fiction is effectively represented by 'The Mammoth's Death,' by Cutcliffe Hyne, and 'The Lady Automaton,' by E. E. Kellett.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Saint Louis (Louis IX. of France), the Most Christian King,' by Frederick Perry, M.A. Louis IX. was one of the best, if not the best, king France has ever had. He was canonised by the Church, and long remembered by the French people as My Lord Saint Louis of good and happy memory. Of his rule Voltaire said: 'Le règne de Saint-Louis est un grand époque.' It is this monarch and his reign that Mr. Perry has chosen as the subject for the volume of 'Heroes of the Nations' lying before us, and a very valuable contribution it is to that excellent series of historical studies. In a preliminary chapter the author describes the condition of France before the accession of Louis IX., more especially under the kings Louis VII., Philip Augustus, and Louis VIII., particularises the so-called vassal provinces, relates the attempts of the French kings to bring under control the independent rulers of those provinces, to consolidate their own power, and to contend against the growing influence of their most powerful vassal the Duke of Normandy, who was all the more powerful as being also King of England. The next chapter relates the events of the young king's minority and the struggle of his prudent and energetic mother, the Queen Regent Blanche, against the pretensions of the barons with whom she negotiated and made terms when unable to conciliate or defeat them. As Mr. Perry says, Louis could have had no better teacher in the arts of policy and government, and none more assiduous in the lessons of piety, than his mother. His reign, as told in the remaining chapters of this well written and profusely illustrated volume, conclusively proves the truth of this statement. This is in all respects a thoroughly good book.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.—'Progress of British Newspapers in the Nineteenth Century,' Illustrated. This volume emanates from the house of the Swan Electric Engraving Company, in Charing Cross Road, and is designed to exhibit the proficiency to which this firm has attained in the production of portraits and other artistic work. It is something after the form of the newspaper directory, though its purpose is limited to typical and varied examples of the newspapers published in the United Kingdom during the past hundred years, and there is no attempt to give a complete list. The history of the London papers during the century is written by Mr. H. R. Fox-Bourne; the provincial journals have been looked after by Mr. Alex. Patterson; and Mr. James Strang and Sir James Henderson, Bart., have respectively taken charge of the Scotch and Irish sections. To those whose business lies in the journalistic world the book will be exceedingly interesting on account of its numerous portraits of distinguished editors, authors, and business managers, to say nothing of the many articles on well chosen subjects; while the outside reader will be no less attracted by the information it affords him in regard to newspaper matters generally. A facsimile of the front page of each journal is given, and the majority of these are reproduced with remarkable clearness and fidelity. Such a volume, however, should never have been issued without an index, and how this comes to have been omitted we are at a loss to imagine.

From the Unicorn Press.—'The Star of Poland,' by J. G. Williamson. The author of this pleasing dramatic poem has chosen for his heroine Hedwig, the youngest daughter of King Louis and Queen Elizabeth of Hungary, who had been betrothed to the Archduke Wilhelm of Austria; but, succeeding to the throne of Poland on the death of her father in 1382, was persuaded by her Polish subjects to break off her engagement to the Archduke in order to espouse Jagellon, Duke of Lithuania, a heathen prince, who would then embrace Christianity. Jagellon made his profession of Christianity in 1386.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Among the Syringas,' by Mary E. Mann. 'Who is born a woman is born a fool' is the motto of this story, and certainly the conduct of some of its female characters seems to justify the ungallant adage. The scene of the action is in and about Syringa Grove, the home of the Rev. Melancthon Dunn, who is described as a parson without capacity, dependent on a stipend of thirty pounds as a workhouse chaplain, and on an uncertain income from other casual work. Yet even he had found a woman foolish enough to marry him. This was Mrs. Bain, an officer's widow, with a son and daughter on her hands. After marrying Mr. Dunn and having two more children, both girls and one a cripple, Mrs. Dunn died, leaving her husband with four children to support, and all the more need of a larger income. However, an additional hundred a year comes from an Indian Government official, who, having just lost his wife and being summoned back to India, entrusts his motherless boy to the parson's care. He asks Barbara Bain, Mr. Dunn's handsome step-daughter, to write by every mail, giving him an account of his child; and, as the sequel shows, her letters are appreciated, albeit her spelling is not faultless. Indeed, Barbara has had no educational advantages, but she is beautiful, and her brother Andy advises her to marry; and she thinks she has found a future husband in Captain Steer, steward to Mr. Carter, a rich city man and owner of Bunthorpe Hall. Mr. Carter dies, and his widow offers to take Barbara as a lady companion, but the young girl is too proud. When, however, the steward jilts her and marries the widow, the latter, finding herself neglected by her second husband, again asks Barbara to be her lady companion, and Barbara, strange to say, accepts Mrs. Steer's offer and goes to Bunthorpe Hall. Hence serious complications; and yet fortune seems to smile upon Barbara as the curtain falls on this clever but painful drama of sordid existence.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Limited.—Ward, Lock & Co.'s Illustrated Guide Books: London, Donegal, Lakes, Wight, Llandudno, Lowestoft, Oban, Belgium and Holland. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Limited, send us eight of their series of Illustrated Guide Books.—'London,' twenty-third edition, includes notices of the Wallace Collection, Leighton House, Kensington Palace, and other recent changes and additions, illustrated by upwards of 80 photographs and numerous maps and plans.—'The Donegal Highlands.' This guide opens with an introduction containing hints to tourists on what places to visit and what parts of the country—flat, boggy, or uninteresting—it were best to avoid. There are 50 beautiful photographs, and the maps of Donegal and Antrim show all new roads, car routes, and light railways.—'The Lake District, eleventh edition revised, with 60 photographic illustrations, has not only a large map of the whole district but also many section maps.—'The Isle of Wight.' In the preface to this eleventh edition the editor thanks correspondents in the island for assisting by their local knowledge to make this guide accurate and helpful. Some new views have been added, bringing the total up to 72.—'Llandudno.' This guide includes the North-Coast of Wales from Chester to Carnarvon, with excursions to Snowdon, Bettws-y-Coed, and other places, and has useful appendices for anglers and cyclists. The views are 60 and the maps five in number.—'Lowestoft.' In his introduction the editor does not fail to call attention to the literary associations connected with the district embraced by this guide, which comprise Norwich, the Broads, Yarmouth, &c. These associations include Wilkie Collins's 'Armada,' Shakespeare's Henry V., 'The Paston Letters,' and 'David Copperfield'; the last-named associated with Blundeston, near Lowestoft, the Blunderstone of the story, and with Yarmouth. Two large maps of the district, a specially drawn plan of Lowestoft, and an outline map of cycling routes from London, together with upwards of 70 illustrations, combine to make the guide a most desirable travelling companion.—'Oban.' This guide, now in its second edition, embraces all places of interest that can be conveniently visited by tourists making that town their headquarters, such as Fort William, Caledonian Canal, Iona, Staffa, and the Western Highlands. It has appendices for anglers, cyclists, and golfers; and is illustrated with 50 photographic views and seven maps.—'Belgium, The Ardennes, and Holland.' The guide to those two small, interesting, and accessible kingdoms Belgium and the Netherlands is in its third edition, and, like the other seven volumes above mentioned, is fully illustrated with views and maps. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.'s series of Pictorial and Descriptive Guide Books now numbers 80 volumes. Judging from the eight samples before us, the publishers seem to have succeeded in providing the travelling public with handy illustrated guides to the principal pleasure and health resorts and towns of Great Britain and Ireland, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Switzerland, and also at Paris, which for extent and accuracy of information and general excellence of production it would be difficult to equal and impossible to surpass for the low price at which they are published.

From Messrs. R. & T. Washbourne.—'The Life and Death of Thomas Wolsey, Cardinal: once Archbishop of York and Lord Chancellor of England,' written by one of his own servants, being his gentleman usher, edited by Grace H. M. Simpson. This is a welcome reprint of Sir William Cavendish's biography of his old master, that great statesman, Cardinal Wolsey, whom he faithfully and zealously served in good and evil fortune. It was an extraordinary career, that of the Ipswich butcher's or grazier's son, who was bachelor of arts at fifteen, and thus became known as the 'Boy Bachelor.' Indeed, it may be said of him that he was always, and in all respects, before his time. Becoming fellow of Magdalene College, Oxford, and master of the College School at an early age, he showed such unusual skill in teaching that the Marquis of Dorchester committed his sons, who were at the school, entirely to his charge, and also presented him to a living. His patron dying soon after, and the living being but a poor one, and having forfeited his fellowship by accepting it, Wolsey cast about for preferment, and obtained the appointment of chaplain to Henry VII. Two of Henry's most trusted counsellors, Bishop Fox, of Winchester, and Sir Thomas Lovell, soon formed a high opinion of the new chaplain's ability, and, when the King urgently needed a special envoy to send to the Emperor Maximilian, suggested him as well fitted by his rare eloquence and learning for the mission. Wolsey being sent for, Henry found him gifted with such 'sharp wit and excellent parts' that he resolved to employ him. The extraordinary rapidity and diplomatic skill with which this mission was despatched laid the foundation of Wolsey's prosperity under Henry VII. and his successor, and it may be added that it was his mistaken policy in ministering to Henry VIII.'s pleasures which mainly contributed to his fall. All this is fairly and fully set forth in Sir William Cavendish's impartial narrative, of which most persons have heard but which few have had the opportunity of reading. Messrs. Washbourne's well-printed edition enables everyone to peruse this picturesque account of the marvellous fortunes of him who for so many years ably administered the government under Henry VIII., and, whatever his faults, was undoubtedly one of the best foreign ministers England has ever had. The editress deserves acknowledgment for the editing of this work, which is not overdone, as is the fashion nowadays when the notes often threaten to submerge the text.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'The Life of Louis Claude de Saint-Martin: the Unknown Philosopher, and the substance of his Transcendental Doctrine,' by Arthur Edward Waite. Mr. Waite has had the happy thought of furnishing English readers with a synopsis of the works of that French mystic philosopher Saint-Martin, contemporary of that other and better-known mystic the Rev. William Law, whose acquaintance he made when visiting London in 1787, and whom Mr. Waite considers as in some respects the Saint-Martin of England. During Saint-Martin's lifetime his name never appeared on the title-page of any one of his writings. He signed himself 'Le philosophe inconnu.' Hence the second title of this work. In England he is chiefly known by translations of his 'Ministry of Man the Spirit' and the 'Theosophic Correspondence.' These Mr. Waite thinks inadequate in themselves to do him justice; but, as his writings would, if completely translated, fill about a dozen large volumes, for which there is now no public, he offers 'in English vesture the story and message of the saintly and illuminated thinker.' The work is divided into seven books. The first contains the mystic's life; then follow 'Sources of Doctrine,' 'Nature and State of Man,' 'Doctrine of the Repairer,' 'Way of Reintegration,' 'Minor Doctrines,' 'Mystical Philosophy of Numbers,' appendices and index. Mr. Waite has done ample justice to the memory of 'The Unknown Philosopher' in this handsomely printed volume, which is issued in the once familiar paper boards with cloth back and printed label.

NEW EDITIONS.—A number of sixpenny editions of popular works have reached us. These include Prince Ranjitsinhji's admirable 'Jubilee Book of Cricket,' published by Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons, with several of the original illustrations; 'The Marquis of Lossie,' by George Macdonald, one of the best and certainly longest of the Scottish novelist's works (Messrs. George Newnes, Limited); and a stirring story of Turf life with the appropriate title of 'Running it Out' from the pen of Nat Gould. The last-named work comes from the firm of Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'A Cigarette Maker's Romance,' one of the best and most artistically conceived of Mr. Marion Crawford's stories, forms the latest volume in the new and uniform edition of this novelist's works which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing. No one could wish for better binding, printing, and paper than distinguishes this edition, while the price is extremely moderate.—A new and enlarged edition has been sent out from 'Home Words' Office of 'The Queen's Resolve' and her 'Doubly Royal Reign,' by the Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. The volume has been brought up to date, and contains an additional chapter on 'England's Welcome to our King.' In this the author is particularly laudatory.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK!

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

•• In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimetres.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS

ENSIGN KNIGHTLEY and other Stories.

By A. E. W. MASON.

MARR'D IN MAKING. By BARONESS von HUTTEN.

With Photogravure Frontispiece.

RETALIATION. By HERBERT FLOWERDEW.

Author of 'The Realist,' 'A Celibate's Wife.'

KING'S END. By ALICE BROWN.

SOME RECENT SUCCESSFUL SIX-SHILLING NOVELS

THE WHITE COTTAGE. By 'ZACK,' Author of 'Life is Life' and 'On Trial.'

'She plucks out the core of elemental passion and sets it before her readers with a directness and simplicity that goes straight to the mark.'—SPECTATOR.

THE CURIOUS CAREER OF RODERICK CAMPBELL. By JEAN McILWRAITH. Second Edition.

'Jean McIlwraith gives us a most excellent human personality in Roderick, a being for whom the reader feels a staunch affection in spite of his backslidings, the time-serving canny old Scot, who was such a tender-hearted and true fighter, who ran away with the pipes of a piper in the Black Watch and set his Indians dancing to them round his forest fire.'

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

KARADAC. By K. and HESKETH PRICHARD, joint Authors of 'A Modern Mercenary.'

'The story is well knit and cleverly handled. Throughout there is certain exaltation of conception and manner which gives the book a refreshing distinction. In the character of Karadac, the dreamer and the man of action are skilfully combined.'—FALL MALL GAZETTE.

ANOTHER WOMAN'S TERRITORY. By 'ALIEN,' Author of 'A Daughter of the King,' 'The Untold Half,' &c. Second Edition.

'Never have her literary and intellectual capabilities been made so apparent as in this remarkable novel. It is far removed from the ordinary.'—DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

TWO SIDES OF A QUESTION. By MAY SINCLAIR, Author of 'Audrey Craven' and 'Mr. and Mrs. Nevill Tyson.'

'Good work which can at least be crowned by recognition.'—ATHENÆUM.

THE SHIP'S ADVENTURE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. Crown 8vo. 6s.

'We welcome with pleasure Mr. Clark Russell's return to good form. It is one of the breeziest novels he has written.'—DAILY NEWS.

THAT SWEET ENEMY. By KATHERINE TYNAN. Crown 8vo. 6s. Second Edition.

'This is Mrs. Hinkson's best novel.'—WORLD.

THE SIN OF JASPER STANDISH. By RITA. Crown 8vo. 6s.

LAKE GENEVA AND ITS LITERARY LANDMARKS. By FRANCIS GRIBBLE, Author of 'The Early Mountaineers.'

THE EIGHTH DUKE OF BEAUFORT AND THE BAD-MINTON HUNT. By T. F. DALE, Author of 'The Belvoir Hunt.' Illustrated. Demy 8vo. Price 21s.

'Every hunting man must possess himself of this volume, as it is the Alpha, one may call it, of fox-hunting record—written in a most pleasing style by a scholar and a gentleman.'

SPORTING LIFE.

WOMEN AND MEN OF THE FRENCH RENAISSANCE.

By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'The Household of the Lafayette.' Illustrated. Demy 8vo. price 16s. net.

'A delightful volume . . . embellished by reproduction of authentic portraits and other illustrations, provided with a capital index, and got up in a style worthy of so interesting a theme.'—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

THE OLD DOMINION. By MARY JOHNSTON.

RHODA FLEMING. By GEORGE MEREDITH.

Britain's Austral Empire

THIS publication consists of a series of drawings and portraits with appropriate letterpress.

The illustrations, reproduced by photogravure, are portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, connected with the Federal Movement.

The artist of the portraits and drawings is Mr. PERCY F. S. SPENCE, a native of Sydney, N.S.W.

The letterpress, which gives in a brief outline the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, is by Mr. G. FIRTH SCOTT, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring' and other works dealing with Australia are well known.

The book consists of Forty-one Photogravures 7×4½ inches, while the Letterpress is printed on Imperial Handmade paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole is contained in a Portfolio of White Vellum and Cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. SPENCE. Only two hundred and fifty copies available in this form.

AMONG THE PORTRAITS ARE—

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CORNWALL AND YORK. LORD SALISBURY.

Representing Australia and England in the Conferences:

Publishers' Circular

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

June 21, 1901.

'A NEW PLAN' TO DO AWAY WITH PUBLISHERS.

We should be failing in our duty to both publishers and booksellers if we did not take the earliest opportunity of making known to them the 'Advantages to be secured to authors, poets, artists, and booksellers by joining the Authors' and Booksellers' Co-operative Equitable Publishing Alliance, Limited.' Our friends the publishers ought to know of the existence—at least on paper—of this Alliance, for, as will be seen presently, it aims at nothing less than their extinction. Our friends the booksellers ought to be made acquainted with the 'New Plan,' for to them it is to bring not extinction but prosperity indeed, 'exceeding even that of the Olden Time.'

'The author,' we are told in the prospectus of this new Trust scheme—Trusts are the order of the day, and we have long been expecting to see one come along which would make short work with the publisher—the author requires two fellow-workers—the book-producer, i.e. the printer, who will see to the complete production of the book, and the retail bookseller, who will introduce it to the public. There is thus no necessity for any other intermediary. The publisher, who makes profit out of author, artist, engraver, paper-maker, stereotyper, printer, bookbinder, and retail distributor, is—we fully expected to hear he was a robber at least after making all these profits—but we find he is only 'not a sine quâ non.'

On re-reading this definition of what an author requires and what a publisher is not, we find we have left out something—nothing less, in fact, than 'the Alliance itself'; that, it seems, is the 'only other intermediary the author requires.'

The 'Executive of the Alliance' in its appeal to authors, poets, artists, and booksellers generally, 'trust that your verdict will be favourable, and that you will become financially interested, if only to the extent of taking a One Pound Share in the enterprise. Form of Application is sent herewith.'

It surely is mistaken policy on the part of the executive of the 'A. and B.C.O.E. Publishing Alliance, Limited' to limit the classes who may become 'financially interested,' by this drastic clause:

'The shares are offered to and can be held only by retail booksellers, news-vendors, authors, and artists, also printers and bookbinders, or friends of co-operation in sympathy with the objects and aims of the Alliance.'

Poets appear to be excluded with the publishers, unless it is intended that they may subscribe for shares as 'friends of co-operation'; it is certain the shares would soon be at a premium if publishers are allowed to subscribe,—for, by the rules of the 'A.B.C.O.E.P.A., Limited,'

'A minimum holding of £1 share, fully paid, entitles to trade terms for printing and publishing and the right to have expert advice—at stated terms'—unfortunately the terms are not stated; this omission may hold some publishers back, even if they are allowed to come in as friends of co-operation.

'The greatest number of shareholders of any one class will be, no doubt, retail booksellers. They indeed must constitute the backbone of the Alliance.' But when the authors and poets and artists get wind of this 'New Plan' we fear the booksellers will soon hear that all the shares are allotted. On second thoughts we are not so sure about this, for it seems that the late Sir Walter Besant, 'after carefully considering the Plan'—(it is always spelt with a big P in the prospectus)—'pronounced it feasible, but expressed a fear that the chief difficulty might be the bringing of authors into line.' That was rather a nasty one from Sir Walter, for if the author stands out of the Alliance one does not exactly see where the rest of the 'B.C.O.E.P.A.' will come in, for without books we fear the profits will be like the Alliance, 'Limited,' and that there will not be very large dividends for the 'backbone' after the managing director and the executive of the Alliance and the 'staff of competent scholars, searchers, artists, designers, &c.' have received their due reward for 'expert advice at stated terms.'

Although by no means always agreeing with the views of the late Sir Walter Besant, we never doubted his wisdom in matters relating to finance, or his disinterestedness in offering advice to the retail booksellers; and without tendering any of our own on the delicate question as to what premium shares in the 'A.B.C.O.E.P.A. Limited' are likely to go to, we will merely add, in the words of the 'Executive of the Alliance,' that

'To avoid all misapprehension it must be clearly understood that Sir Walter Besant is neither directly nor indirectly responsible for this enterprise, or in any way connected with the Society, as he has made it a rule not to be financially interested in any publishing business.'

That this disclaimer was to be associated with the use of his name was evidently made, in the words of the executive, a 'sine quâ non' on the part of Sir Walter.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Macmillan Company publish under the title of 'The Limits of Evolution' certain essays in which Prof. G. H. Howison attempts to apply to such chief human concerns as Science, Art, and Religion his theory of a personal idealism, which, briefly stated, is to the effect that nothing exists but Mind, yet that there exists, not a single conscious subject of which all are parts, but many minds mutually inter-related.

Mrs. Hugh Fraser, the author of 'A Diplomatist's Wife in Japan,' will shortly have published through Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. a new novel with the scenes laid in Japan, where Mrs. Fraser lived for several years. The title of the new novel is to be 'Marna's Mutiny,' and it has been written for summer reading.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons will publish in the course of the next few weeks 'Tales from Tolstoi,' translated by Mr. R. Nisbet Bain. The volume will contain a photographic portrait of Count Tolstoi.

We are glad to hear that Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son's new building is completed and that their business is now transferred to it at 7 & 8 Stationers' Hall Court.

The preparation of the 'Life of the Rev. James Chalmers of New Guinea,' whose recent murder has so deeply stirred the hearts of all friends of Foreign Missions, has been entrusted to the Rev. R. Lovett, M.A., the author of 'James Gilmour of Mongolia.' The book will be published in due course by the Religious Tract Society. Mr. Lovett will be grateful if correspondents of Mr. Chalmers would kindly allow him to see, and to make such extracts as seem desirable from, letters which they have received from him. Such letters may be sent to 56 Paternoster Row, London, E.C., and every care will be taken to see that they are safely preserved and returned in due course to their owners.

Dr. Bigg, who has recently been appointed Professor of Pastoral Theology at Oxford, has revised his well-known translation of 'The Imitation of Christ,' of which Messrs. Methuen are publishing a library edition printed in large and legible type. It is probably not known that nearly every translation of 'The Imitation' published in England has been to a certain extent doctored to suit the prejudices of the Protestant reader. On the other hand, in Dr. Bigg's translation we have the book exactly in the shape in which it left the hands of the author.

Mr. John Macqueen announces for immediate publication a new novel entitled 'The Lost Key,' by the Hon. Lady Acland, author of 'Hugh Moore' and 'Love in a Life.' The story is of society in Malta, and the central episode concerns a crime which caused much embarrassment to the Home Government and materially affected relations with foreign Powers.

In the June number of the New York Critic Mr. Leslie Stephen has a few words in memory of the late George M. Smith, whose recollections have appeared from time to time in the pages of that magazine. Mr. Stephen, who by the way married one of Thackeray's daughters, was editor of the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' of which Mr. Smith was the publisher and founder. It is Mr. Smith's portrait, Mr. Stephen tells us, that Charlotte Brontë drew in the Dr. John of 'Villette.'

Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co., Strand, London, will publish this month a work which would have had great interest for the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore, closely relating as it does to the 'Lorna Doone' country, viz. 'The History of the Part of West Somerset, comprising the parishes of Luccombe, Selworthy, Stoke Pero, Porlock, Culbone, and Oare,' by Charles E. H. Chadwyck Healey, K.C., F.S.A. The edition is very limited, and application for prospectuses should be made at once by all interested in the district.

Messrs. Sands & Co. announce for immediate publication a new novel by 'Rita' entitled 'Prince Charming,' which promises to be very popular.

The section of the New English Dictionary about to be published carries on the work from Jew to Kairine, and the following section will finish 'K' and complete Vol. V. Dr. Murray is responsible for the following instalment, and he invites special attention to the great words Judge, Jury, and Justice. Jingo has a special interest at the present time. The opening article in 'K' sketches the interesting history of that letter, and its status in English, where, like 'J,' it has only a restricted native function, but a large alien constituency.

'The Measurement of General Exchange-Value,' by Correa Moylan Walsh, is a work published by the Macmillan Company which attempts to simplify some of the problems of Political Economy by stating them in terms of mathematical formulæ.

'Asparagus grows wild in England, notably at Tintagel.' This is the opening statement made by Mr. Charles Ilott in 'The Book of Asparagus,' to be published immediately by Mr. John Lane. The author does not limit himself to the asparagus alone, as celery, salsify, scorzonera, and sea-kale are dealt with, and useful hints are given to promote their culture. This volume is the first of a half-crown series of illustrated handbooks of practical gardening under the editorship of Dr. Harry Roberts, author of 'The Chronicle of a Cornish Garden,' who himself contributes some chapters on the history, decorative uses, and cookery of the vegetables. The second volume of the series, 'The Book of the Green-House,' by J. C. Tallack, F.R.H.S., will be issued in July.

S. R. Crockett's new novel 'Cinderella' will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have decided to postpone publication of Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy's new book, 'The Queen's Comrade; or, the Life and Times of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough,' until early in the autumn, in order that the work may be issued simultaneously here and in America.

The facsimile of the Alfred Jewel, which Mr. Elliot Stock has been at work upon during the past two years, is now just ready for issue to the subscribers in connection with the Millenary Commemoration at Winchester in September. Some idea of the difficulties which have surrounded the production of the jewel may be formed when it is stated that four separate models had to be made before a perfect result was obtained.

Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co. have now ready a new and important family history, fully illustrated, entitled 'Memorials of the Duttons, of Dutton in Cheshire,' with notes respecting the Sherborne branch of the family. This work gives the history of one of the most important Cheshire families, with its branches in Gloucestershire and elsewhere, from the Norman Conquest to A.D. 1784. It embodies a large amount of new matter of high genealogical and historical interest, supplemented by many interesting illustrations. It has been prepared at the instance of Lord Sherborne, the present representative of the family, and only a very limited number of copies has been printed.

Messrs. Methuen will shortly publish a new edition of one of the most remarkable books on mystical religion ever written. This is a partially modernised version from the MS. in the British Museum of 'Revelations of Divine Love,' by Juliana of Norwich. Miss G. H. Warrack has edited the book, which has always had an extraordinary fascination for those interested in mysticism.

Mr. Heinemann will have ready on the 26th inst. a novel entitled 'The Inheritors' which Mr. Joseph Conrad has written in collaboration with Mr. Ford Madox Hueffer. The action of the story takes place in literary and high political circles of England and Paris.

'The Town and Island of Bombay—Past and Present' is the title of an interesting paper in the 'Journal of the Society of Arts' for June 14. It is by Mr. L. R. Windham Forrest.

In the second June number of La Revue de Paris M. Achille Vaillote contributes an article on 'A Century of American Finance'; Pierre Delbet has a paper on 'The Evolution of Surgery'; an article on 'Chinese Poetry from the Earliest Times' comes from Judith Gautier; while Maurice Emmanuel writes on 'Prose and Music.'

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week Mr. W. S. Lilly's latest work, 'Renaissance Types.'

The Honorary Degree of Doctor of Law has been conferred upon Miss Weston, of the Royal Sailors' Rest, by the University of Glasgow, at the celebration of their 450th anniversary, in token of their warm appreciation of the great work carried on by herself and her coadjutors in the British Navy.

Messrs. Methuen will publish very shortly in their 'Little Library' a volume of selections from the works of William Blake. This little book will give the general reader many of his best lyrical poems and also some of his prose work. It contains an introduction and notes by Mr. Mark Perugini, and, as a frontispiece, a life mask of Blake by J. Deville.

Our Cats is the title of a weekly penny paper devoted solely to cats. It is published at 5A St. James's Street, London, W.C.

Mr. Charles Taylor, of 22 Warwick Lane, informs us that he has purchased from the trustee the whole of the stock of Mr. L. R. Rydell, of Fenchurch Street.

Mr. Edmund Seale, of 10 Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Hill, E.C., will shortly publish 'Curiosities of First-Class Cricket,' by F. S. Ashley Cooper. The compilation will deal with all unusual events connected with important matches played in all parts of the world during the past hundred and seventy years.

Messrs. Jordan & Sons, Limited, 120 Chancery Lane, London, will publish early next week a new volume by Mr. Henry Warren (the author of 'How to Deal with your Banker') entitled 'Your Banker's Position at a Glance.' The balance-sheet of every bank of any importance in the United Kingdom has been carefully analysed, and so arranged that the reader can see his banker's position 'at a glance.' In numerous instances the highest and lowest prices of the shares for the last ten years are given, with their intrinsic value based thereupon, while the tables at the end of the volume should prove interesting to both bankers and their customers. It is perhaps strange, seeing the importance of the subject, that this is the first book dealing with the whole of the banks in the United Kingdom that has ever been placed before the public.

Collectors of old engravings in line and stipple should see the new catalogue of Messrs. Simmons & Waters, of 10 Spencer Street, Leamington Spa. Three of the items are portraits of Queen Victoria, which are pretty sure to go up in value.

'The House of Dreams,' by the Rev. W. J. Dawson, will be published in future by Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son, who are preparing a new edition of the book for immediate use.

The Secondhand Book Catalogue No. 129 of Mr. James Thin, of 50 South Bridge, Edinburgh, contains a fine list of interesting and valuable works relating to Scotland. His Catalogue No. 130 will interest collectors of Cowper's works.

The Furniture Record, Ltd., 8 City Road, London, E.C., have purchased the copyright of the monthly furnishing journal the Furnisher, and have incorporated the same with the Furniture Record.

Mr. David R. Tomson, of the 'Cromwell' Book Stores, St. Neots, has many items in his secondhand book catalogue of interest to collectors of literature relating to county history at very moderate prices.

'THE LIVING ANIMALS OF THE WORLD.'

Hearing of the proposed publication, by Messrs. Hutchinson, of a new work on the lines of their extremely popular 'Living Races of Mankind,' our representative called at 34 Paternoster Row and saw Mr. Hardingham, a representative of the firm. He said: 'We are taking natural history as our subject this time, and I think I may say that we shall produce something absolutely unique in the way of a complete Popular and Pictorial Natural History.' It is, in fact, a Natural History on an entirely new plan.

'How is this work to be published?'

"The Living Animals of the World" is to be we have had submarine photographs of fish reproduced, and ready for Part I., for some time past.'

Our representative asked for names of the contributors.

'As to the writers for the work,' said Mr. Hardingham, 'among many others may be mentioned the names of C. J. Cornish, F.Z.S. (Editor), F. G. Afalo, F.Z.S., John Bickerdyke, R. Bowdler Sharpe, LL.D., C. H. Lane, F.Z.S., H. A. Bryden, W. Saville-Kent, F.Z.S., W. F. Kirby, F.L.S., Sir Herbert Maxwell, F.R.S., and F. C. Selous. The work will be revised by Mr. R. Lydekker, F.R.S., and Dr. R. Bowdler Sharpe, LL.D.'

'In fact, the results of years of study and research of the world's greatest naturalists, travellers, explorers, hunters, and collectors will be given in our new work.'

'Do you consider the book will have as large a circulation as "The Living Races of Mankind"?''

'Yes, I think it will have even a larger circulation, for whereas "The Living Races of Mankind" appealed perhaps more to the mature mind, Natural History certainly appeals to all alike—the young person will delight in this superb work for its lovely illustrations and coloured plates and the authentic anecdotes told by the travellers, hunters, &c. themselves; and the grown-ups will like it because it will be in every sense a complete, concise, and up-to-date pictorial photographic description of the world's beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles, and insects.'

'Will it be produced in the same style as "The Living Races"?''

'Yes, it will even go one better. We gave only two coloured plates with "The Living Races" — as frontispieces to the two volumes; with "The Living Animals of the World" we are giving two superb coloured plates with Part I., and a coloured plate with every other part. This will be very costly, considering that each plate is reproduced by the latest photo-colour process.'

'I should like to emphasise that out of the whole number of the illustrations and coloured plates (considerably over 1,000) not a single old block will be used. Every illustration is carefully reproduced from a perfect photograph selected from a large collection. However carefully the artist may draw, or the wood-engraver engrave, there is always some little touch of nature which must be omitted; but the camera must give a faithful picture.'

'What terms do you propose to issue "The Living Animals" at to the trade?'

'The terms will be the same as those which "The Living Races" were supplied at, with this additional advantage, that the numbers will be sent on sale or return, so that every bookseller and newsagent may have a good supply without any risk. And when I remind the trade that before all the orders for Part I. of that work were executed we had to go to press with seven editions (two before publication) they will see the advisability of placing their orders with us at the earliest. We are getting a very large number of inquiries about the new book, and we feel sure the trade are also.

published in twenty-four fortnightly parts at 7d. each, and will contain over 1,000 illustrations, including 25 superb full-page coloured plates, and the whole of the illustrations will be reproduced entirely from photographs. The success of "The Living Races of Mankind," I believe, was largely due to the fact that the whole of the world's human family was faithfully portrayed from photographs. What we have done for the human race we shall do for the animal kingdom in "The Living Animals of the World."

'Is not the expense of obtaining the photographs very great?'

'Yes, it is, but no expense of time, money, or effort has been spared to make this book a wonder of production. I am safe in saying that no recent discovery in natural history will be overlooked in this complete work. Only in this morning's paper I noticed an account of fish being photographed under water. Well,

As an instance of the extraordinary demand we are printing a first edition five times as large as that of No. I. of "The Living Races." There is no reason why every bookseller and newsagent should not have a subscription list for "The Living Animals of the World." Messrs. Hutchinson will be pleased to supply a specimen copy of No. 1, with the two coloured plates, and show-cards, posters, and prospectuses, on application to them at 34 & 35 Paternoster Row, London.

Our representative congratulated Messrs. Hutchinson on the success of their previous work, and hoped that of their new one would exceed their expectations.

THE SOCIAL SIDE OF THE LEIPZIG PUBLISHERS' CONGRESS.

Although the hurry and bustle connected with the Congress monopolised a good deal of the day at Leipzig, yet by the economy of time much of this beautiful city could be seen, and much of its history and literary associations gleaned from the intelligent booksellers who know their town so well.

The building which is of the most interest to members of the bookselling trade is the 'Buchhändlerhaus,' which is the head and centre of the whole of the bookselling trade of Germany. It was at Leipzig that the first Booksellers' Association was established in 1525; it is the oldest organisation of this character in the world, and is most thorough and efficient in its system of management. This body, called the Börsenverein, consists of about 3,000 members, and as it is estimated that in Germany there is one bookseller to every 5,000 of its inhabitants, the work of regulating the trade, what discounts may be given, keeping a register of defaulters, and settling all questions connected with the publishing and bookselling business, some slight idea can be formed of the immense number of details this Association has to consider.

The great feature of the book trade of Leipzig are the book fairs, which are held each year at Easter and Michaelmas, where the 'on sale' accounts are made up and settled, and arrangements for the next season made. It would be quite impossible to adequately describe the various social festivities which were prepared for the members of the Congress by their hosts; everything was of the best, and without stint. On Sunday evening a reception was given by the President, Herr Albert Brockhaus, which brought the delegates together, renewing old friendships and creating many new ones. On this occasion each delegate was presented with a brooch on which his name was scrolled in silver; this was found most useful in recognising members, and in a less dignified body might, after some of the banquets, have been also found of service.

On Monday evening a banquet was given by the Börsenverein, which was of a most sumptuous character. To an ordinary Englishman the arrangements at this and other dinners appear most strange; the guests assembled at seven o'clock, and one hour and a quarter elapsed between the soup and fish. A speech was given at this period, accompanied with a toast, then the whole assembly arose, walked about, clinked glasses until exhaustion took place, and the next course appeared, the last being brought on at 10.15. These arrangements were the same at each dinner, and what with the noise of the trumpets, which accompanied the 'Hochs,' and the general enthusiasm, one scarcely felt equal to the occasion, but it is quite a question if these arrangements are not better for the digestive organs than the solid straightforward eating which takes place at the public dinners in this country. On Tuesday a concert was given in the Gewandhaus by Herr A. Nikisch which was of a very high order; this was followed by a reception by the Town Council, at which some 500 were present, all struggling for some dainty morsel, accompanied by the flowing cup which had been so lavishly prepared for the occasion. Wednesday afternoon was given up to visiting some of the bookselling and printing establishments in Leipzig. In all these establishments there was evidence of that intelligent organisation and thoroughness which is such a conspicuous characteristic of the German people. The early evening was devoted to private dinner parties given by some of the leading members of the trade, and later on an enthusiastic welcome greeted the delegates at the Bierabend in the Zoological Gardens, where German beer and music carried us well into the morning. On Thursday a concluding banquet was given in the Palmengarten, which showed no falling off in enthusiasm. At all these banquets the table cards and menus were much admired, many of them being works of art. On Friday a specially arranged train took us to

MR. CHAS. E. WALCH.

Berlin, where the arrangements for our entertainment were equally complete, a two hours' drive round the principal streets and a banquet in the evening completed the day. On Saturday, after visiting the Government Printing Offices in the morning, a large party went by special train to Potsdam. After visiting the Kaiser's and Frederick the Great's palaces, a gaily decorated steamer took us down the river Havel, which brought the Killarney lakes forcibly to the mind. This trip ended with a dinner, and at its conclusion the English delegates present gave three hearty cheers for Germany and its generous hosts, which surprised the natives and was evidently much appreciated. Throughout the congress and the well-organised entertainments there was not a discordant note, the compliments given and received were those of two nations who have learned to respect each other; and as an Englishman one does not abate one jot of admiration for his own country, yet many who were present at the congress cannot but feel that there are many things which could well be learned from these level-headed, broad-backed members of the German bookselling trade.—X.

THE OLDEST FIRM OF BOOKSELLERS IN AUSTRALASIA.

On January 1, 1846, in Hobart, Tasmania, then and for many years afterwards known as 'Van Diemen's Land,' was established the publishing, bookselling, and stationery business of J. Walch & Sons, the subject of the present article. The bookselling business itself, however, is of older date, for it was started in 1836 by Mr. Samuel A. Tegg, a son of Mr. Thomas Tegg, the well-known publisher of Cheapside. Mr. S. A. Tegg on the death of his father decided to sell his business and return to London, when it was purchased by Major J. W. H. Walch, a retired officer of her Majesty's 54th Regt.

The Hobart Town of that day, fifty-five years ago, was a very different place from the city of Hobart of to-day, and its wants were more easily supplied, especially as regards literature. Its streets and shops were dimly lit with oil, and most of its appliances were primitive in the extreme. As regards communication with the 'old country,' that was entirely dependent on sailing vessels, not the 'Clipper' of more recent date, but old fashioned craft which seldom made the passage under a hundred days, sometimes extending to four months. It was not for some years afterwards that the P. & O. Company put on a couple of their small steamers to convey a monthly mail from Suez to Port Phillip—now the State of Victoria. These steamers also brought a small amount of merchandise, how small may be judged from the fact that across the Isthmus of Suez the goods had to be transported slung on the backs of camels, in packages measuring 18 x 12 x 12 inches, and of a limited weight. The cost of importation amounted to twenty pounds a ton.

Business in 1846 and the few succeeding years was decidedly bad, not in Hobart Town only but throughout Australia, when the discovery of gold in Victoria in 1851 made a marvellous change. Returned gold-diggers brought with them into the several towns fabulous amounts of gold, which they lavishly spent, and then went back to the 'diggings' to get another supply. Anything and everything sold, and the shops were well-nigh depleted of stock. Shopkeepers were at their wits' end to get goods to sell, and besieged the merchants' offices on the wharf, bidding against one another for the privilege of giving as much as 100 per cent. for goods 'to arrive.'

Major Walch, the founder of the firm, died in 1852, having previously taken into partnership his son Mr. J. H. B. Walch, the style of the new firm being J. Walch & Son. At this time the whole of the importing business was in the hands of the merchants on the wharf, which was well enough for the general class of goods but decidedly bad for books. With the increased purchasing power of the community, and the consequent growing demand for new and higher class books, Mr. J. H. B. Walch decided that the time had arrived for taking a new departure, and so in 1853 he took into partnership his brother, Mr. Charles E. Walch, in order that he should go to London and open up direct relations with the publishers; the name of the firm at the same time being altered to J. Walch & Sons.

Arriving in London early in 1854, Mr. Charles Walch secured offices in Bucklersbury, where for five years he transacted the business of the firm. A perfect stranger in London, from such an unknown and almost unheard of place as Van Diemen's Land, Mr. Walch encountered many difficulties and had many strange and amusing experiences among publishers and others; but the net result was that the 'new departure' proved a grand success and greatly increased the business, besides making the firm of J. Walch & Sons known to every publisher.

At the end of five years the growth of the business in Tasmania necessitated Mr. Walch's return, and the London agency was handed over to Messrs. J. M. Holworthy & Co., of Great St. Helen's.

In 1860 the partners decided to develop their stationery trade by erecting a suitable building, and to combine with it a bookbinding and account-book manufactory. Mr. Charles Walch again went to London, and purchased the necessary stock and a complete equipment of the most modern machinery. The completed premises and workshops were opened in 1861 and were considerably enlarged in 1891; a wholesale paper store was also added.

Increasing business necessitated larger premises, so in 1874 the original building, known as 'Wellington Bridge,' was pulled down and in its place was erected a spacious and handsome shop 75 x 35 feet, fronting on two principal streets. In this building space was provided for a show-room 75 feet long for exhibiting the stock of English, French, and German pianofortes and American cabinet organs.

In 1897 Mr. James H. B. Walch, the senior partner, died, having been in the business 52 years, and the management devolved on Mr. Charles Walch, who took into partnership his nephew Mr. Richard Walch, the firm still retaining the old title of J. Walch & Sons, while the London office was removed to 48 Gresham Street and placed under the management of Mr. Charles M. Holworthy.

The advantage of doing their own printing being very evident, the new partners decided to erect printing-offices, which were opened last year, furnished with the best English and American machinery and type.

We cannot conclude this account of 'the oldest firm of booksellers in Australasia' without some notice of their two publications, which have greatly helped in the extension of both their name and their business.

Walch's Literary Intelligencer, a sixteen-page monthly publication, was commenced in 1859 for the purpose of bringing under the notice of the public the new books and other goods the firm had to offer, together with literary news of the day. For forty-two years this publication has been in existence, and is the pioneer of all similar ones throughout Australia, and for many years it stood alone.

Walch's Tasmanian Book Almanac—or, to give it its more familiar title, 'Walch's "Red" Book'—is an annual of 400 pages, published 'By Authority,' and is now in its thirty-ninth year. It is recognised throughout the entire Commonwealth as the one publication that gives the fullest and most reliable information as to everything pertaining to Tasmania, and the estimation in which it is held by the Government may be judged from the fact that large supplies are sent annually to the Agent-General at London for distribution. In Tasmania it is the book that is to be found everywhere throughout the State.

Messrs. J. Walch & Sons hold many appointments: they are Contractors to the Government for the supply of Books and Stationery to the State Schools of Tasmania, Booksellers to the University of Tasmania, the Parliamentary Library, the Public Library, and all the leading clubs &c.

Finally—in the words of the leading daily paper in Hobart, when writing about the firm in 1897—"Walch's Corner" has been a bookseller's shop for nearly sixty years. It celebrated its Golden Jubilee and its sixty years' "reign" with her Majesty's, and no one can dare speculate when "Walch's Corner" will cease to disseminate literature over the island."

FRENCH UNDERSSELLERS VERSUS PUBLISHERS.

The Paris Temps contains the following particulars of the unsuccessful effort to fight the Associated French Publishers and Booksellers (La chambre syndicale des Libraires de France et le syndicat des Editeurs), to which reference was made in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of June 8:

M. Le Gouaziou, of Guingamp in Brittany, charged nine Paris publishers with the offence of coalition provided against by Article 419 of the Penal Code. This bookseller, having been requested by the syndicate of booksellers of the West to comply with the tariff drawn up by that syndicate by not consenting to grant to his customers higher discounts than those authorised by the rules of the Syndicates of Booksellers and Publishers of France and of the Syndicate of Publishers, refused to submit to this order, which had also been repeated to him by the Presidents of the Syndical Chamber of Booksellers of France and the Syndicate of Publishers. In consequence of this refusal, the booksellers who supplied M. Le Gouaziou would do no more business with him, and his firm was put on the interdict list. He was therefore obliged to apply to agents for his supplies of books, and to pay higher prices than his competitors.

Furious at this, he summoned before the Correctional Police Court nine publishers and booksellers who had refused to continue supplying him. These were MM. Picard, Hollier-Larousse, Hachette, Le Soudier, Delagrave, Poussielgue, Gédalge, and Delaplane. He also prosecuted, as accomplices, the Presidents of the Syndicates.

According to him, the being placed on the interdict of which he complained constituted on the part of the defendants the offence in question, as having had the result of raising the prices above those of natural competition and free trade.

Maitre Perrier, of the Guingamp bar, pleaded the plaint before the Ninth Chamber, presided over by M. Puget. The counsel for the defendants were Maitres Pouillet, Du Buit, and Gorland.

The decision of the Court was that:—

Considering that Article 419 provides against the coalition made between holders (détenteurs) of one and the same kind of merchandise; that in this case the condition is not realised; that, in fact, the publishers having each their own speciality, the books published by them retain their individuality; that there are as many different kinds of merchandise as there are publishers; that this merchandise not being the object of free competition (libre concurrence) escapes almost completely from the law of supply and demand, and that there exist for books neither markets nor rates (qu'il existe pour les livres ni marchés ni cours);

Considering, on the other hand, that the coalition provided for by Article 419 of the Penal Code appears, at least since the law of 1884 on the professional syndicates, not to be unlawful and punishable except when accompanied by fraudulent actions, and that such actions have, by influencing the rates (cours), operated a rise or fall;

Considering, in fact, that professional syndicates have for their object the defence of respectable economic interests; that we ought not to refuse to syndicates of publishers the right to fix in agreement with retail booksellers a net price (un prix de revient) below which the books may not be sold; that the freedom of commerce itself has for its limits the exercise of the freedom of agreements;

For these reasons, no fraudulent actions resulting from the facts stated, the court dismisses the suit against the defendants, and condemns the plaintiff to pay the costs.

'GOOD BUSINESS.

Mr. Andrew Lang has a very amusing article in the Morning Post, dealing with certain threatened legal proceedings in which a popular novelist is to figure as compelling the editor of a Sunday publication to publish the truth too naked—or is it vice unadorned?—we shall know later on:—

"It is a brilliant idea! We have had the missing word competition, and now we have the missing chapter. The discovery, like many great discoveries, seems to have been made by accident, but is capable of valuable developments, especially in a sportive direction. The state of the game at present, if I understand it, is this. The proprietors of a new magazine—let us call it Rotten Row—purchase, say for £30,000, the serial rights of a novel by an eminently moral author. Experience teaches us that authors renowned for their unflinching desire to elevate the human spirit and to encourage the loftiest ethical consciousness, in the greatest possible number of persons possessed of six shillings to spend on self-education—do write very queer things. Two consequences are apt to follow. Either the purchasers of the new periodical write anonymous and threatening letters to the editor; or the editor is very much afraid that they will cease to buy. So he remonstrates with the author thus:

"DEAR SIR,—Your chapter XVII., in which Macusquebagh, after breaking all the windows in his cabin, cuts the throats of Mrs. Macusquebagh and the thirteen children with panes of glass, afterwards attempting to enter a railway carriage "For Ladies Only" in a state of total nudity, is a masterly performance. Never have I been more powerfully impressed by your virile grip of your theme, and your unshrinking realism. But I trust you will pardon me for hinting that even your public is not yet educated up to that pitch of moral hardihood which can accept naturalism so naked (nuda veritas) and (most properly) so unashamed. May I therefore entreat you to spare the lives of at least six of the victims, and to refrain from causing Mr. Macusquebagh to discard his sporran, or is it philabeg? The philabeg would save the situation, at present gravely compromised. Trusting that you will consent to so trifling a modification of your Titanic chapter,—I remain, reverentially yours,

THE EDITOR.

"P.S.—Of course, you can take your fling in the six shilling edition."

"Well, the ideal author cries, like Thomas Campbell, when Rogers hinted at an emendation, "Hang it! I should like to see the man that would dare to correct me." Or, like Sir Walter, when Mr. Blackwood ventured on a suggestion, the author will say, "D—n his impudence! Tell him that I am one of the Black Hussars of literature, who neither give nor receive criticism." These horrid expletives, of course, the modern author does not utter, but he insists on his chapter, his whole chapter, and nothing but his chapter. Then the editor, his blood being up, refuses to publish the chapter, and thus there is "work for the gentlemen of the long robe." All this, of course, commercially considered, is very good business, and literature ought to be regarded with a commercial eye.

"So far, then, the business is good. And if, in such an example, a process at law follows, the business is excellent. The book that was interrupted by the editor is canvassed in court. The judge, the Bar, the gallery enjoy themselves extremely. Leading articles and paragraphs are produced on all sides. The descriptive reporter has what he would style "a perfect carnival." Say that the editor, or publisher, wins his case, then he has not only become famous for his moral delicacy, but, I presume, he has obtained his renown at a cheaper rate than if he had paid for the whole novel, whereof he only published a part.

"Of course, these new developments of literary interest are things which no two contracting parties could arrange beforehand. But they ought to be foreseen and prevented."

AN AUTHOR'S PROTEST.

"Rita" desires us to state that a book purporting to be a new novel of hers entitled 'Lord of my Life' has been issued by a firm of publishers. The novel is in reality 'Dame Durden,' of which she sold the copyright to Messrs. Maxwell & Son. It has been in circulation in various editions for the last twenty years. The original title has been changed without the author's knowledge or consent.

TRADE CHANGES.

Mrs. Hindley begs to notify that in consequence of her present premises being required for the Strand improvement her trade and retail business will be removed to 100 St. Martin's Lane, W.C., after June 30, 1901.

Mr. Frederick R. Jones has removed from 11 Strand Hotel Buildings, Holywell Street, to more convenient premises at 7 King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son, who, during the re-building of their premises have had their offices at 23 Paternoster Row, and their sales department at 65 Shoe Lane, have now re-transferred both departments to their new buildings, 7 & 8 Stationers' Hall Court.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'Glendarroch,' by Murho. A pleasant flavour of holiday-making, with its accompanying joys of picnicking, yachting, driving, &c., pervades this story, and to some extent counterbalances its want of depth. Even the evil influence of the narrative performs her requisite mission in quite unpronounced fashion, and seems to call for pity in her jealous impulses rather than actual repugnance. The chief impression left on the reader's mind is of a charming holiday party, composed of light-hearted young people, into whose company it would have been a pleasure to be admitted; but as a story the plot undoubtedly needs strengthening. It is very brightly and sympathetically related, and we should imagine has some foundation in fact.

From the Art and Book Company.—'Blessed Sebastian Newdigate, Courtier, Monk, and Martyr, a Sketch of his Life and Sufferings,' by Dom Bede Camm, O.S.B. 'This little work,' says its author, 'does not claim to be the result of original research, or to contain anything hitherto unknown to students.' But, nevertheless, it is a very touching story and most sympathetically told, this truthful narrative of the upbringing, court life, cloister life, and heroic death of the Carthusian Monk Sebastian Newdigate, scion of the ancient family of Newdigate, whose father was John Newdigate, Lord of the Manor of Harefield in Middlesex; where the family had been settled since the time of King Edward III., who had knighted Sir John de Newdigate of that day for his services in the French wars. Dom Bede Camm not only tells his tragic story well and without exaggeration, but he also picturesquely describes the scenes of his hero's earliest and latest years, Harefield and the Charterhouse, and their surroundings. It was for refusing to take the oath of Royal Supremacy that Sebastian Newdigate, William Exmew, and Humphrey Middlemore were cruelly done to death at Tyburn on June 19, 1535, after Henry VIII. had himself twice attempted by persuasion and threats to induce Newdigate to take the oath. 'Courage and self-sacrifice,' says Froude, 'are beautiful in an enemy and a friend. . . . So we will not refuse our admiration to those gallant men whose high forms, in the sunset of the old faith, stand transfigured on the horizon, tinged with the light of its dying glory.' This handsome volume is fully and well illustrated.

From Messrs. J. Baker & Son, Clifton.—'The Ghost of Tintern Abbey,' by Mrs. Arthur Traherne. Ghosts are a little out of fashion nowadays, having given way to the superior claims of psychological romance, but it must be admitted that the author has evolved a fairly interesting story from the old material. Naturally a slight air of unreality hangs about the narrative, but if the reader can conveniently lose sight of this he will find much in Mrs. Traherne's novel that will interest him.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'An Itinerary of the English Cathedrals for the Use of Travellers,' compiled by James G. Gilchrist, A.M., M.D., University of Iowa, U.S.A., revised and edited, with an introduction on Cathedral Architecture, by the Rev. T. Perkins, M.A. Dr. Gilchrist's original purpose in writing this little work was to supply a handbook for the guidance of visitors from the United States; but as it seemed likely to be equally useful to English tourists the publishers placed the manuscript with Mr. Perkins for revision, and the volume is now issued as a companion to their well-known 'Cathedral Series.' It is a useful little book, in which all the leading features of the different cathedrals are concisely set forth; and Mr. Perkins's admirable introduction furnishes the reader with such information in regard to the Norman, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular styles of architecture and the general disposition of a cathedral as will enable him better to appreciate the architectural beauties of the edifices he afterwards visits. There are a large number of illustrations—some forty in all—and these form an additional attraction of the work, while in a table at the end some interesting particulars are given concerning the dimensions of the various cathedral churches.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Waterloo,' by Erckmann-Chatrian, and 'Le Blocus: Episode de la Fin de l'Empire,' by Erckmann-Chatrian. Curiously enough, the publication of these volumes in the 'Pitt Press' series comes almost simultaneously with the death of Sir Walter Besant, whose partnership with the late Mr. James Rice in the production of English fiction supplies the only notable parallel in this country to the famous collaboration of the German-French one. In the present edition of 'Waterloo' and 'Le Blocus' historical, grammatical, and explanatory notes, with a short introduction, have been supplied by Mr. Arthur R. Ropes, M.A., and various maps and plans are also included. Both volumes should prove admirably adapted for educational purposes, and in the method of general production leave nothing to be desired.

From the same.—'The Early Age of Greece,' by William Ridgeway, M.A., Disney Professor of Archaeology. The Disney Professor of Archaeology, whose work on the Origin of Metallic Currency and on Weight Standards published four years ago attracted deserved attention by its erudite and brilliant treatment of such a difficult archaeological subject, has, in the important and exhaustive publication of which the first volume has just appeared, undertaken the formidable task of attempting to solve some of the chief problems of early Greek history by the employment of the deductive method. Prof. Ridgeway stated in his preface that the nature of the questions involved rendered it necessary to deal to a considerable extent with the early archaeology and ethnology of the upper Balkan Peninsula, Central Europe, and Italy. This first volume treats of the monumental, traditional, and linguistic aspects of the subject. Beginning with an account of the prehistoric remains discovered by Dr. Schliemann at Mycenæ and elsewhere, the author proceeds to investigate the question. Who were the makers of the objects called Mycenaean. He then compares the remains of Mycenaean Age with the culture described in the Homeric poems; deals with the question as to whence came the Achæans; describes the weapons, ornaments, &c., of the early Iron Age, the round shield of the Achæans and Hallstatt folk and other cognate subjects, and concludes with an investigation into the Homeric dialect. This volume, containing 154 illustrations, will be shortly followed by a second, dealing chiefly with institutions and religion, which will complete this monumental work.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co, Limited.—'An Eton Boy's Letters,' by Nugent Bankes. Time was when letters were looked upon by the multitude as a somewhat dreary form of reading and especially to be avoided as a means of sustaining a narrative. Sir Walter Scott, if we remember rightly, makes particular mention of this fact in his introduction to 'Redgauntlet.' However, thanks to lovers and other epistolary-inclined enthusiasts, we have changed all that, and at the present time letters are quite the mode. That 'An Eton Boy' should strike into the fray—or, as he would probably term it, be 'in the swim'—is but natural, for when was precocious youth ever left in the background? These letters, in which he describes to his relatives and friends his life at the College from the time of his entrance until his departure, are written in a spirit of most charming exuberance, coupled with a boyish simplicity and yet shrewdness that will greatly exercise the risible facilities of a reader who is not too old to have lost all sympathy with his own early days, and the pranks and youthful escapades which then made life so delightful. Nor are the terrible worries and trials that beset the educational tyro's existence entirely lost sight of. The book will pleasurably carry many a reader's mind back to a halcyon time of life when the impulses were strong towards unrestraint and mischief, and the future years as they lay stretched out before him seemed well-nigh interminable.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Representative Men,' by Ralph Waldo Emerson. This is an appropriate addition to the well-known 'Temple Classics,' edited by Mr. Israel Gollancz. We have so frequently spoken in terms of high praise of the general production of these volumes that nothing remains to be said, except that the excellence of the printing, binding, and paper is well maintained.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Cry of the Poor: being the True and Faithful Account of a Three Months' Tour amongst the Pariahs of the Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland during the last Half-year of the Nineteenth Century,' by Robert H. Sherard. It is perhaps not strange that this volume should prove a little disappointing, for to investigate fully the poverty of a large town like Manchester, Liverpool, or Glasgow requires not only a few days but the whole of the time devoted by the author to his survey of the United Kingdom. Mr. Sherard's work, in short, lacks breadth, and the fact that he seems very largely to have relied upon the opinions of others instead of examining into matters for himself gives an air of superficiality to his observations. It would certainly also have shown greater disinterestedness had he omitted his photograph from the book.

From the Government Printing Office, Washington, U.S.A.—'Annual Report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, showing the Operations, Expenditures, and Condition of the Institution for the Year ending June 30, 1898.' This, as our readers well know, is something more than a report in the ordinary acceptance of the word, and the present volume contains various papers of great scientific value. The actual report, in fact, runs to a hundred pages, while the general appendix, containing the articles referred to, constitutes the vast bulk of the volume. Among the contributors to its pages are Professors Lockyer, Sylvanus Thompson, James Dewar, Geikie, and others. Three articles especially worthy of mention are 'On our Present Knowledge of the Origin of Man,' by Ernst Haeckel; 'Recent Advances in Science and their Bearing on Medicine and Surgery,' by R. Virchow; and 'The Life and Works of Brown-Séquard,' by M. Berthelot. The volume is well supplied with maps and other illustrations, and to the student of science presents reading of great educative value.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'The Cottage Homes of England,' by W. Walters Crotch. Second edition revised and enlarged. This book was written as a statement of the case as regards the housing of the rural population. The author tells us that his object was 'to attempt to quicken among our people a deeper interest in the shocking conditions under which the peasantry of our land eke out a livelihood.' The first edition being exhausted, the author has brought out this new, revised, and enlarged edition, which embodies the changes made by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1900—an Act, however, which the author thinks will not materially affect the housing problem in the rural districts; although he commends the appointment of the County Council as a Court of Appeal from the indifference of a Rural District Council to the needs of villages. There is a mass of useful and interesting information in Mr. Crotch's handy and well-printed volume.

From Verlagsanstalt Alexander Koch, Darmstadt.—'Deutsche Kunst und Dekoration,' Band VII., Oktober 1900—März 1901. Herr Alexander Koch, who is editor as well as publisher of that admirable periodical Deutsche Kunst und Dekoration, the seventh volume of which lies before us, lays stress in his preface on the wonderful results shown at the Paris Exhibition of last year in the development of German Art, and especially of Applied Art, not merely in its gratifying outward result but also in an inward consciousness of power. Henceforth Germans need not wait so anxiously for the judgment of France and England on their artistic taste. Having watched the progress of Deutsche Kunst during its not very long existence, dating only from October 1897, we may be justified in saying that that ably conducted, lavishly illustrated, and artistically produced publication has in no slight degree contributed to the development of German artistic taste. Space fails to do justice to the numerous articles of interest in this new volume. We can but mention a few, such as Dr. Max Osborn on the Paris Exhibition; Berlepsch-Valendas on Arnold Böcklin; Franz Erler, of Munich, by Dr. K. Mayr, and that which should have most interest for booksellers, Dr. L. Volkman's article on Sascha Schneider's Wall Pictures in the 'Book Trades' (Buch-Gewerbe) house at Leipzig. It is scarcely necessary to add that these and all other articles are fully and admirably illustrated.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Anni Fugaces: a Book of Verse with Cambridge Interludes,' by R. C. Lehmann. Very bright and spontaneous are the poems in this volume, though naturally the subject lends itself to a feeling of sadness. Still the author, even when reviewing the years that are past, with their old associations of youth and good-fellowship, never seems to lose heart for the present, and his philosophy is always manly and robust. Possibly there is an affectation of age in the volume; it is a fashion of the time. Mr. Lehmann should not impose upon his admirers. Anyhow we could wish that his sprightly muse had a better setting than on the present occasion, the type used being noticeably old and worn.

From Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh.—'Elementary Text-book of Zoology,' by Arthur T. Masterman, M.A., F.R.S.E. It must be confessed that when we saw this volume the doubt arose in our mind as to whether there was any necessity for another text-book on this subject. Mr. Masterman himself seems to have felt this objection; for though in his preface he argues that no apology is needed for thus adding to the long array of tutorial manuals, he yet proceeds to set forth the advantages and objects of his own work in a way that augurs something of the conscience-smitten. His aim, it seems, has been to provide the student with a volume that shall not only be an aid to him at lectures, but also prove a guide in the more practical work of dissection. For the advancement of this purpose, Mr. Masterman has written the descriptions of the types, and in the majority of instances has drawn the figures, with the animals (or the parts of them) before him, 'in order that the work may be found an aid to dissection as well as a preparation for written examinations.' Throughout the volume the practical side of the question, the necessity of helping the student to a fundamental knowledge of the subject whereby he shall satisfy his examiners, has evidently been kept very closely in view, and no disposition is shown to introduce new features of classification or fresh types. The book, we believe, will be found of real advantage to the large body of natural history students—more especially in Scotland—and to this end its clear phraseology, excellent arrangement, and numerous illustrations will powerfully contribute.

From Mr. John Long.—'Mrs. Musgrave—and her Husband,' by Richard Marsh. Where this story previously appeared we do not know, but we have a distinct remembrance of reading it before. Probably it was in one of the magazines, for nothing is said about its being a new edition. Like most of Mr. Marsh's novels it possesses sufficient character to impress itself upon the memory. Mr. Musgrave is a gentleman who marries the daughter of a murderer, and being very much in love only discovers when on his honeymoon the mistake he has made in not previously inquiring about his wife's relatives. He is also at the same time disagreeably made acquainted with other particulars in regard to Mrs. Musgrave's past life. An old admirer of hers staying at the same hotel—a distinguished authority on mental disorders—very imprudently wishing at such a moment to renew his old ascendancy over her, is stabbed by the indignant bride to the heart. The husband and wife then fly for their lives, but a staunch friend of the 'mad doctor' obtains a clue to their whereabouts, and eventually finds Mr. Musgrave out. The latter then murders the faithful friend in order to avoid the detection of his wife, and eventually both Mr. and Mrs. Musgrave, happy in each other's love, but unfortunately victims to adverse circumstances, commit suicide while the officers of the law are knocking at the door, the baby being also a participator in the catastrophe. It is a gruesome story, but for many readers will possess a certain morbid attraction.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'Thoughts in Past Years,' by Edward Henry Bickersteth, D.D., late Bishop of Exeter. The volume before us contains eighteen discourses selected by Bishop Bickersteth from the many he must needs have delivered during the last fifty-two years. The subjects are as varied as their treatment is uniformly attractive and convincing; and, while it is impossible to peruse these sermons without at once perceiving that they are the work of a cultured and refined intellect, there is no trace in them of any conscious display of learning. Indeed, what most of all impresses one in these discourses is the gentle, sympathetic, and truly amiable spirit by which each and all of them is animated and which when they were delivered must have drawn the hearts of preacher and hearers very near to each other indeed. The Bishop, who is so well known as the author of that beautiful poem 'Yesterday, To-day, and For Ever,' and as the compiler of the admirable collection of hymns called 'The Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer,' has chosen some hymns from his own graceful pen, one of which is placed at the end of each discourse, forming a pleasing complement to it, and adding greatly to the charm of a volume which will doubtless have a large circle of appreciative readers.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'The Crisis,' by Winston Churchill. Mr. Churchill has a great following in America—captured by 'Richard Carvel,' to be bound more firmly to his chariot wheels by 'The Crisis.' He would not expect his books to be so popular in England, for they are written by an American for Americans. Yet we will say at once that nobody who begins to read 'The Crisis' will fail to finish it. The story concerns itself mainly with the doings of Miss Virginia Carvel—a charming heroine—whose loyalty to the cause of the South fought so hard against her love for Stephen Brice the Northern soldier. Mr. Churchill writes as a strong sympathiser with the North, and as a fervent admirer of Abraham Lincoln, but there is no lack of generosity in his writing—as he himself says in his afterword: 'The breach that threatened our country's existence is healed now. There is no side but Abraham Lincoln's side.' All through the book the shadow of that great struggle is present; and the great actors come and go—Lincoln and Grant and Sherman, all drawn with a firm hand and full of life. Mr. Churchill does not attempt to retell the oft-told tale of the great battles of the war, and we look at the fighting more from the point of view of the hospital base than of Headquarters. A notable exception is the description of the capture of Vicksburg, a fine bit of writing, which makes us regret Mr. Churchill's severe self-restraint. The book indeed is full of good things, among which Mr. Christy's drawings must not be forgotten. Look at the frontispiece and you cannot fail to admire 'Miss Jinny.'

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Practical Licensing Reform,' by the Hon. Sidney Peel. 'There is no domestic question of such vital importance as the problem of the drink traffic,' says Mr. Peel in the opening words of this interesting volume, and few, we believe, will venture to dispute his statement. As secretary to the Royal Commission on Liquor Licensing Laws Mr. Peel has had exceptional opportunities of studying the problem, and in his present treatise he very ably draws attention to the main features of the subject. Among such features are the excessive number of licensed houses, the tied-house system, the causes of the failure of licensing administration, the police and police authorities, the position of clubs, and the compensation question. The author would suggest a policy of reform all round; the number of licensed houses should be reduced, the licensing authority reconstructed, trade with other articles (such as groceries) forbidden, opening hours shortened, and so on. In an appendix is a Summary of the Recommendations of the Royal Commission.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Public Relief of the Poor: Six Lectures,' by Thomas Mackay. These lectures were delivered at the Church House, Westminster, at the invitation of the Joint Lectures Committee, during the winter of 1900-1901. The author has treated the subject from a theoretical point of view, his object being to show the possibility of dispauperisation by a well-reasoned argument. This he holds to be what is chiefly required, for once the theory has been established, practical results will follow as a matter of course. The respective subjects of which he treats in his lectures are 'The Origin of the Poor Law,' 'The Old Poor Law,' 'The Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834,' 'The Administration of the New Poor Law,' 'The Relation between Legal and Voluntary Agencies of Relief,' and 'The Future of Public Relief.' All Mr. Mackay's observations and reasoning point to the conclusion that pauperism is to a large extent an artificial and unnecessary condition, and that there are great possibilities of reform within easy reach. The problem that has to be mastered in the enquiry is embodied in two questions: firstly, What are the instruments and arts of economic progress which have reared the fabric of civilised society, and given to a portion of the community many indubitable advantages? and, secondly, What are the obstacles which forbid to the poorer: lass the use of these instruments and the practice of these arts? It is to the solution of this problem that Mr. Mackay sets himself. His work, which will be found of great interest, is a valuable contribution to the elucidation of a most important question; and, even though we may disagree with some of his conclusions, it is impossible not to admire the industry and knowledge he has brought to bear on a very formidable task. We warmly commend the volume to all who are anxious to see our system of public relief thoroughly reorganised and placed on a substantial footing.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Salambo: the Maid of Carthage,' re-told from the French of Gustave Flaubert, by Zénaïde A. Ragozin. This volume forms the third of the series 'Tales of the Heroic Ages.' While unable to confess a liking for literary adaptations we are willing to believe that they may occasionally have their uses, and if so, are justifiable. This much being conceded, we have pleasure in commending the skilful way in which Zénaïde A. Ragozin has re-told Gustave Flaubert's masterpiece. She certainly merits the gratitude of her young readers for the historical account of the rivalries between Asia and Europe with which she has prefaced it. The interest and educational value of the work are increased by the views and plans with which it is illustrated.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Hints for a Bush Campaign,' by Lieut.-Col. A. F. Montanaro, R.A. These suggestions on bush fighting are intended for the guidance of those officers and non-commissioned officers who propose soldiering in West Africa and have had no previous experience of this branch of warfare. They are offered by a man who plainly understands what he is talking about, and is not above the appreciation of simple details. The force with which he is supposed to be operating in the bush is taken as 1200, but of course the principles enunciated will hold good for smaller columns. The little work is both interesting and practical.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.—'A Child of Art,' by Annabel Gray. Admirers of this author's works will know that they are always likely to get a fascinating amount of incident in her writings, and on the present occasion they will surely not be disappointed. 'A Child of Art' is the daughter of an Italian street vendor in Leather Lane, and her beauty of face and figure is so great that she is eagerly sought after as a model by the artists at the West End. With one of these she falls in love, but, finding that his affections are centred on a titled lady of his own class, she sacrifices everything to bring about their marriage. Subsequently she yields to the honest love of a millionaire, and we are transported to Italy, where another and previous lover, who is a brigand, turns up, and matters are made lively. The bride and her father then disappear, leaving a disconsolate bridegroom behind them, and ultimately they re-appear in London, where 'A Child of Art' figures as a famous prima donna at the Opera House. The Italian brigand follows to slay her, but is eventually subdued by a feeling of remorse and happily dies from the opening of an old wound. Gemma, the Italian girl, is then happily reunited to her husband. The story in many respects is well told, and perhaps loses nothing from the authoress's tendency to rail at the success of others and the hypocrisy of the world generally, which in its evident difficulty of repression becomes rather amusing. There is, according to Annabel Gray, 'a universal taint in our literature, our art—in every form of worldly ambition—the taint of falsehood and of a narrow egotism.' In a modified degree this is no doubt true, and so long as the world exists there will always be selfish and calculating people in it, but surely it is a mistake to concentrate one's attention so closely on only one side of the picture.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Manners for Girls,' by Mrs. Humphry ('Madge' of Truth). Some excellent advice is given in this little work, which it is sincerely to be hoped the present generation of young girls will avail themselves of. In general matters of etiquette and deportment Mrs. Humphry is an admirable authority to consult, and her quick observation has rendered her cognisant of all the embarrassing situations of polite life. The débutante could scarcely do better than place herself unreservedly in such experienced hands.

From the same.—'The Maid of Maiden Lane,' by Amelia E. Barr. The course of a very pretty love story, related with great sympathy and charm, is the principal attraction of this novel. The plot is laid in New York towards the close of the eighteenth century, when English people were scarcely so popular as they are now, being disliked on account of their exclusive self-confident bearing. However, the dashing Lieutenant Hyde falls a victim to the all-powerful charms of beautiful Cornelia, the daughter of a doctor, and they exchange vows of the most unalterable constancy, spite of the opposition of disagreeable relatives. All goes well for a time, and then through the misdirection of a letter a serious misunderstanding is caused. It is an old device, but the author may be forgiven for her want of originality in the interesting complications that ensue. When matters are eventually cleared up the book is in its last pages, and the reader as he lays the volume down will have the recollection of a very delightful story impressed on his memory. The portrayal of the Dutch characters, the Van Heemskirks and Van Uriens, is especially good, and Mrs. Barr seems just to have caught the right expression of their simplicity and upright bearing.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'A Crafty Foe: a Romance of the Sea,' by Hume Nisbet. Fate was certainly very unkind to Mr. Hume Nisbet when she prompted him to write the preface to his present novel; and what with his own indiscretions and the blunders both of spelling and punctuation that a careless printer has been guilty of, the result is a production that in his calmer moments he can scarcely feel proud of. The story, however, when we come to it, is so full of surprising incidents that the reader will overlook shortcomings of literary style in the excitement aroused. The opening chapter tells of a mysterious submarine vessel, 'all glistening with rounded deck and sides compact and perfectly smooth,' which, without any previous warning, suddenly shoots out of the water at the side of a gold-freighted steamer on the Yukon river, and, opening fire on the unfortunate ship, speedily sweeps the deck of all the passengers and crew. This is accomplished with a gun worked by a strange figure encased in armour, 'at a speed of thousands of revolutions a minute'; and the disabled steamer, after it has been allowed to drift some little way, is finally sent to the bottom with a well-directed explosive shell, leaving not a single survivor behind. Many previous ships with rich cargoes and specie having disappeared in this fashion, the shipping insurance companies of America and Great Britain are heavy losers, and at length it is determined to set the famous New York detective, Gaius Eglon, on the trail of the mystery. The remarkable adventures he encounters when engaged on his investigations form the gist of the volume. We may say that when he is eventually successful in bringing the perpetrator of these atrocious murders to justice it is by means of another submarine vessel. However, before this comes about he is captured by the enemy and imprisoned on a wonderful island in the Pacific Ocean, whence he manages to communicate with his friends through his skill as a mesmerist. The story is full of startling events, and affords abundant testimony to the fertility of the author's imagination. To say that it allows the reader no opportunity to reflect over the glaring improbability of the various incidents is to pay the book the highest praise in our power.

NEW EDITIONS.—Mr. William Heinemann publishes under special arrangement with Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. a new and clearly printed sixpenny edition of each of those two popular novels 'The Potter's Thumb,' by Flora Annie Steele, and 'The Heavenly Twins,' by Sarah Grand. Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. publish also in one volume, price sixpence, John Strange Winter's two favourite tales, 'Bootle's Baby' and 'Houp-la.'

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

'FROM KEEL TO TRUCK.'

MARINE DICTIONARY IN ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND GERMAN, amply illustrated by explanatory diagrams of the most important details.

By CAPTAIN H. PAASCH,

Knight of the 'Order of Leopold,' of the Imperial 'Order of Francis Joseph,' of the 'Order of the Red Eagle,' of the 'Order of the Crown of Italy,' of the 'Military Order of Christ,' Officer of the Academy, &c., &c.,

Member of the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland, Author of the 'Illustrated Marine Encyclopedia,' &c.

Third Edition (Tenth Thousand), very greatly enlarged and revised throughout.

EXTRACT FROM THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

No greater satisfaction can be realised by an author than to have the knowledge that his labours are duly appreciated, and that his efforts have given to the public a work of undoubted utility. This appreciation has been shown and the utility proved in the manner in which two previous editions of this work were received.

Two years have been devoted to the additions which have increased the contents of the work by about 35%. The labour has been conscientious, and no stone has been left unturned to supply, as far as possible, a term in each of the three languages for every item that can be imagined in connection with nautical matters. Four months have been devoted to the elaboration and arrangement of the index, which contains upwards of ten thousand terms in each language, with a view to facilitating research to the full-st extent.

And yet I by no means claim that the work is complete, that it contains all the terms connected with ships or shipping, or that it is free from all and every error, because nothing in this world is perfect or unimprovable; but I venture to say that few people possess, in any one language, the amount of technical information given herein in three, and I therefore submit it, like its predecessors, to the maritime world with utmost confidence in its success.

'From Keel to Truck' forms a very handsome royal 8vo. volume, carefully printed on good paper, and illustrated with a great variety of specially drawn and carefully reproduced figures, diagrams, and plans representing nearly every object mentioned in the text. The price is 24s. cash (25s. post-free).

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland .. 8s. 6d.
 „ Six Months ditto ditto 4s. 6d.
 „ Three Months ditto ditto 2s. 6d.
 To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage 11s. 0d.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

By E. MARSTON.

CHAPTER. CONTENTS.
I. JACOB TONSON—1656-1733. Portrait.
II. THOMAS GUY—1644-1724. Portrait.
III. JOHN DUNTON—1659-1733. Portrait.
IV. SAMUEL RICHARDSON—1689-1761.
Portrait.
V. THOMAS GENT—1691-1778. Portrait.
VI. ALICE GUY (wife of Thomas Gent).
VII. WILLIAM HUTTON—1723-1815. Portrait.
VIII. JAMES LACKINGTON—1746-1815.
Portrait.
The Illustrations include the above seven portraits and a picture of Samuel Richardson's House at Fulham.

The GLOBE says:

'Mr. Edward Marston, the well-known publisher and angler, has been induced to bring together and issue in a pretty little volume
(S. Low & Co.) the "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days" which he wrote originally for the Publishers' Circular. By so doing he has laid all book lovers under a heavy but agreeable obligation.'

'These stories of the lives of Jacob Tonson, Thomas Guy, John Dunton, Samuel Richardson,
Thomas Gent, William Hutton, and James Lackington were all worthy of the permanence and vogue which they will secure by being obtainable in book form. The facts about Richardson are tolerably well known, but with the other booksellers named the public are not very well acquainted, and herein Mr. Marston pleasantly enlightens them. He writes an easy, genial style, and so puts his material together in appetising fashion. He supplies portraits of all his subjects, and is to be thanked for the type, paper, and binding bestowed upon the book, which is one of the daintiest ever brought out by his firm.'

LEEDS MERCURY.

'There is a pleasant literary flavour in this little volume, many pictures:que but almost forgotten facts, and a few portraits.'

CINDERELLA*A New Novel,*

BY

S. R. CROCKETT.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top.

'This is a new departure for Mr. Crockett, and his pictures of town life are marked by all his familiar vividness and skill. "CINDERELLA," it may be said, is a modern story which has its similarity to the old fairy tale. A neglected child grows up to be the heroine, and the "handsome prince," of course, is not wanting.'

CINDERELLA

CINDERELLA

'Cinderella is one of Mr. Crockett's happiest efforts. . . . Nowhere has Mr. Crockett shown a more conspicuous mastery of his craft than in the ease with which he here passes from Galloway scenery and character to descriptions of the inwardness of "smart society."

'Cinderella, otherwise Hester Sterling, is one of Mr. Crockett's most winsome lassies, and her varied fortunes serve at every turn only to develop her to a winsomeness even more enticing.

'Cinderella is a book for the summer and for holiday time. The worn citizen, feeling for recuperation from crowded cities and the press of affairs may, as he stretches himself on the hearth or by the sounding sea, find here what will give him a new zest for the country side, a new appreciation of his fellows, a new and wholesome sense of the joy of living.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

'Of the many characters in Cinderella not one can be dismissed as a failure. . . . A heroine mere claiming than Hester Stirling never leaped on to the stage from Mr. Crockett's brain. . . . "He was a man out of the north country, bent whom was growing up a light militia of strapping sons." There is plenty of tonic as exhilarating as this in the chapters of Cinderella. . . . Among the persons whom we like most, her Grace of Niddiscale is the chief attraction. We have already paid a tribute to the charm exercised throughout this novel by the heroine, of whose portrait Mr. Crockett may well be proud.'—LITERARY WORLD.

Britain's Austral Empire

THIS publication consists of a series of drawings and portraits with appropriate letterpress. The illustrations, reproduced by photogravure, are portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, connected with the Federal Movement.

The artist of the portraits and drawings is Mr. PERCY F. S. SPENCE, a native of Sydney, N.S.W.

The letterpress, which gives in a brief outline the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, is by Mr. G. FIRTH SCOTT, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring' and other works dealing with Australia are well known.

The book consists of Forty-one Photogravures 7 × 4½ inches, while the Letterpress is printed on Imperial Handmade paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole is contained in a Portfolio of White Vellum and Cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. SPENCE. Only two hundred and fifty copies available in this form.

AMONG THE PORTRAITS ARE—

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CORNWALL AND YORK. LORD SALISBURY.

Representing Australia and England in the Conference:

RT. HON. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, HON. EDMUND BARTON, HON. C. C. KINGSTON, HON. ALFRED DEARIN, HON. JAMES R. DICKSON, Sir PHILIP O. WHAT THE BOOKSELLERS REALLY WANT TO 'CLEAR OUT STOCK' IS ANOTHER GREAT FIRE OF LONDON.

Dr. Nicoll, Editor of the British Weekly, has been writing in the Daily Mail on 'Novelists' Profits.' It is an interesting article, but as no names are mentioned it does not leave the reader much wiser about the profits made by authors. We are told that the 'very successful author' is 'moderately rich,' as we might have supposed, and that there are not more than forty novelists in this country who can live in a reasonable way on the profits of their books alone. Dr. Nicoll might tell us what he considers a reasonable way for a novelist to live in. He calculates that there are 85 novelists who 'live by what they receive from the publication of their books as serials as well as in volume form'; how they live, whether in a reasonable or unreasonable manner, is left to our imagination—judging from the way their characters live, some of them must have very lively times indeed.

It is a little surprising to find that Dr. Nicoll thinks that because one or two publishers have been offering surplus stock of dead 6s. novels at about cost price or less, with a few live authors thrown in to leaven the lump, that therefore the ordinary novel and novelist are doomed. No such luck, we fear. Like the poor, the ordinary novelist will always be with us, as he, and especially she, ever has been, and there will be periodical sales of dead and dying stock in the future as there always have been in the past.

Here is what Dr. Nicoll says:—

'The most serious omen for the future of the ordinary novelist is the announcement which appears in a trade organ that a distinguished firm of novel publishers "have decided to make a special offer to the trade of a selection from popular novels in sets of twenty-five at twenty-seven shillings net per set, special attention being directed to the fact that the majority of the works are by well-known and distinguished authors." What this means, I suppose, is that the practice of making advances on royalties has been carried to an extravagant extent. I know of a book by a very popular novelist which has not yet brought back to the publishers one quarter of the advance they made upon royalties. It is a great temptation in these circumstances, seeing that the royalties have been paid for several times the sale already achieved by the book, to sell the volume at any price it will fetch.

'But if this practice is carried on and imitated, the result will be that the trade in six-shilling novels, already very unremunerative on the whole, will collapse entirely. This will mean that no writer will have his book published who cannot be sure of selling, at the very least, fifteen hundred copies, and he must be content with very moderate payments. I know instances of writers with well-known names whose books do not sell more than 150 copies, and I could name one writer, at least as well known by name in America as in England, and known everywhere in both countries, whose book sales do not exceed an average of a thousand. If novels go down to a price of 3s. 6d. or lower, it will not be worth while to publish any unless they are written by very popular authors. These popular authors will not sell more copies, and they will receive about a third of what they receive now. If authors and agents were wise they would never ask for any advance beyond the royalties on the first month's sale.'

How the authors and agents must have chuckled when

In their Daily Mail they read

The cry of over-production of books in London is not exactly a new one. In 1625, nearly three hundred years ago, J. D. almost foretells the destruction of St. Paul's by fire in consequence of the over-production of books and the 'murdering of paper.' The following lines are from a satire, referring to the booksellers dwelling then in St. Paul's Churchyard and Little Britain, and entitled

'AN INQUISITION AGAINST PAPER PERSECUTORS.'

'It is no wonder,
That Paul's so often hath been struck with thunder;
'Twas aimed at those shops, in which there lie
Such a confused heape of trumperie, Whose titles each terme on the posts are rear'd,
In such abundance, it is to be fear'd
That they in time, if thus they go on, will Not only "Little" but "Great" Britain fill
With their infectious swarms, whose guilty sheets
I have observed walking in the streetes,
Still lurking neare some church, as if hereby
They had retired to a sanctuary,
For murdering paper.'

We do not know who 'J. D.' was, but the lines are not unworthy of Dr. Donne; if they were his, it is a pity he did not live until 1666, when he would have seen St. Paul's itself and all the booksellers' shops round it consumed in the Great Fire, and thus, by the destruction of Little Britain, Great Britain saved from the plague of books.

One who heard the story 'from judicious men of that trade'—i.e. Booksellers—thus describes

THE DESTRUCTION OF BOOKS IN THE GREAT FIRE OF LONDON.

'The booksellers who dwelled for the most part round about the Cathedral, had sheltered their books in a subterranean church under it, called St. Faith, which was propt up with so strong an arch and massy pillars, that it seemed impossible the fire could do any harm to it; but having crept into it through the windows, it seized on the pews, and did so try and examine the arch and pillars, by sucking the moisture of the mortar that bound the stones together, that it was calcined into sand; so that when the top of the Cathedral fell upon it, it beat it flat, and set all things in an irremediable flame. I have heard judicious men of that trade affirm, that the loss of books only in that place, Stationers' Hall, public libraries, and private houses could amount to no less than £150,000.'

The Great Fire cleared out the books of 1666 pretty thoroughly—but we cannot burn London every time the book trade is slack.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

'The First Interpreters of Jesus,' by Prof. G. H. Gilbert, is an attempt to define precisely what those men taught who wrote the books that are preserved in the New Testament. Examining the subject strictly from this point of view, and not attempting to find answers to questions subsequently formulated by theology, Professor Gilbert analyses and summarises the teaching first of Paul, then of the minor writers, James, Peter, Jude, and the author of Hebrews, and lastly that of John. The Macmillan Co. are the publishers.

Mr. Walter Crane and Mr. Lewis F. Day, in the Art Journal for July, conduct an amusing conversation concerning the propriety of animals in design, and this friendly dispute is of particular domestic interest. All of us, for instance, have trodden on carpet so horrid in pattern that our only satisfaction lies in the spurning of it: while everyone has experienced the delight of contemplating a material woven into a refreshing and harmonious design. 'Human and animal forms are, as often as not, a disturbing influence in repeated pattern,' says Mr. Day: 'why use them there?' 'Because,' replies Mr. Walter Crane, 'their forms give me certain lines and masses decoratively valuable and not obtainable by other means.' 'As to lions and tigers on a Persian carpet,' says Mr. Day, horrified at the thought of his drawing-room being changed into a Noah's Ark or Zoological Gardens, 'I can't endure them! there is too much suggestion of a menagerie.' Mr. Crane and Mr. Day thus championing their own cause, might aptly, in this case, be called carpet-knights. Illustrations accompany the dialogue.

A first edition of Gray's 'Elegy' with many portraits &c., added, priced at £248; and a unique and remarkable series of Napoleon Portraits and Caricatures are advertised by Mr. William Brown, of 26 Princes Street, Edinburgh, in his No. 138 Catalogue, with many other interesting items.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing in two volumes, in their 'Standard Library,' a new edition of Lord Chesterfield's famous Letters to his Son. This edition is the only one extant which contains an authentic text. It has been annotated by Miss Calthrop, and has an elaborate Introduction by Mr. Charles Strachey.

Messrs. J. Baker & Son, of Clifton, are about to publish a legendary romance by Marcus S. C. Rickards entitled 'The Clock of Arba.' The poem is interspersed with lyrics in varied metres.

'The Story of Books,' by the author of 'The Story of British Coinage,' is on the point of publication in Newnes' 'Library of Useful Stories.' The author, after a brief sketch of Books and Libraries in classical and mediæval times, dwells chiefly on the development of the modern book since the beginning of printing by movable types. The aim has been to give an adequate account of early printing in Italy, Great Britain and Ireland, and other countries. Some quaint illustrations add to the interest of the story.

'Les Juifs en Roumanie,' par Edmond Sincerus, is a book written in French but published in England by Messrs. Macmillan, which describes the Anti-Semite movement in Roumania, where equality of rights for all citizens was secured by the arrangements at the Treaty of Berlin. Since 1886 a continuous legal persecution has been directed against the Jews, who, though subjects of no other Power, are officially classified as foreigners. Many instances of this persecution are given, and conclusive evidence of the heavy emigration of Jews from the country.

Temple Bar for July gives, under the title of 'A By-way of the Boer War,' the experiences of a 'Company Officer,' who joined Von Steinacker's Corps, not as a combatant, but to report on the condition of the Selati railway; we thus have the criticism of an expert on the methods of irregulars. A story by 'John Ayscough' treats seasonably of the dawn of a love affair in 'the playground of Europe,' and is called 'An Alpine Prelude.' E. M. Lynch, whose name has lately been made familiar by reviewers, contributes a brief tragedy entitled 'Vixen,' in which a jealous girl kills her aunt's lover by means of a poisoned ring; 'Casilda's Mind,' and the 'Vacancy at Fossington' are more cheerful essays in fiction—and Mr. Eardley Wilmot tells some strange stories in 'The Supernatural in India.' The serials by Mr. Crockett and Mr. Egerton Castle are continued.

A contribution to the never-ceasing supply of new fiction is Mr. Thomas Cobb's 'Severance,' which will be published by Mr. John Lane on July 2.

Mr. E. T. Cook, until lately editor of the Daily News, has just finished his book on 'The Rights and Wrongs of the Transvaal War.' His object, as the title indicates, has been to give a comprehensive chronological account of the causes of the war, with an examination of the arguments on both sides. Extracts from Blue Books have been included with a view to making what is expected to be an exhaustive treatise on the subject. The book will be issued in a few days by Mr. Edward Arnold.

Mr. John Milne will publish in a few days a sixpenny edition of 'The Rome Express,' by Major Arthur Griffiths.

The last number of 'The Novelist' is Mr. Gilbert Parker's story 'When Valmond came to Pontiac.' This Messrs. Methuen issue at sixpence.

Messrs. Methuen have just published in their well-known 'Rochester Edition' of the novels of Charles Dickens 'Barnaby Rudge,' with an Introduction by Mr. George Gissing, notes by Mr. F. G. Kitton, and illustrations by Miss Beatrice Alcock.

Mr. G. W. E. Russell's edition of 'Matthew Arnold's Letters' is now re-issued in two volumes, globe 8vo., by Messrs. Macmillan in their well-known 'Eversley Series.'

The Duchess of Sutherland contributes to the July number of the Twentieth Century Review an article called 'An Impression in Spain,' which she wrote on her recent visit to that country.

The Western Times, Exeter, established 1828, has changed hands. The arbitrators were Mr. Wellsman (Messrs. C. Mitchell & Co.) for the vendors, and Mr. Daniel Powell for the purchasers.

Collectors of works on China, Japan, and the Philippine Isles should note that Mr. Jacques Rosenthal, of 10A Carl Street, Munich, has a long list of such works for sale (16th to 18th century) in his No. 28 catalogue.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION AND THE LEIPZIG CONGRESS.

At the meeting of the Council of the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland, on June 20, the President, Mr. Frederick Macmillan, proposed, and it was unanimously agreed, to send to Mr. Albert Brockhaus, as President of the Congress, the very hearty thanks of the Council for the splendid reception accorded to the English delegates at the Congress.

A FEW REMINISCENCES OF THE LEIPZIG CONGRESS.

At the request of the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, I have much pleasure in placing on record a few reminiscences of the Congress.

It is indeed impossible to speak too highly of the admirable and business-like way in which the affairs of the Congress were conducted, and of the hearty and sumptuous nature of the hospitality which was extended to all the members of the Congress. The work was no mere sinecure (as some persons who did not attend are inclined to insinuate), and, on the other hand, the entertainments and amusements, though in all respects most enjoyable and highly appreciated, were by no means productive of repose. In short, the bodily and mental strain entailed on those who conscientiously adhered to the programme was no light one, and justified the suggestion that the representatives attending a publishers' congress should be accompanied by an ambulance train.

Those who had never been at Leipzig before, and had made no study of the German book trade, could hardly fail to be amazed by the importance of this great European book emporium with its clearing house for the whole Empire, and the handsome cluster of red brick buildings which form the Buchhändlerhaus.

It was in this palace (for I can call it nothing less), which was built not many years ago at a cost of over £50,000, that the Congress met on Monday morning, June 10. To each representative was handed a portfolio containing a guide to Leipzig, plans of Leipzig and Berlin, an account of the Leipzig book trade, a copy (in German and French) of the new German Copyright Bill, which passed into law while the Congress was sitting, and other tastefully printed and interesting volumes. Along with this portfolio there was presented to each member a little silver and red-velvet badge, on which was inscribed his name in silver wire letters. These badges were worn throughout the Congress, and enabled the 'adherents' to recognise one another.

Formal proceedings commenced with the opening speech of President Albert Brockhaus, and the reports of the secretaries of former Congresses, but while these were being read the whole assembly rose to receive Herr von Metsch, the Minister for Home and Foreign Affairs of the King of Saxony, who had come from Dresden on purpose to welcome the Congress to the Kingdom.

It was a source of no little mortification to the English representatives to reflect that in every country except England formal official countenance is given to these Congresses. In Paris the Ministre du Commerce gave a banquet; in Saxony the leading Minister of State attends the opening session; in London the very least official recognition is flatly refused, and even a reception at the Mansion House is denied.

His Excellency (who is Lord Goschen's brother-in-law) was given a seat by the side of the president and proceeded to deliver a speech expressing the pleasure he felt in welcoming the delegates, the importance which he attached to such congresses as a means of promoting international good feeling, and alluding to the Berne Convention as the Magna Carta of international intellectual life.

It would be tedious to record the different discussions which took place day by day, and for present purposes it is sufficient to state that each morning there was a full session to receive the results of the work of the sections on the previous day, and that, both in the full meetings and at the sectional meetings, there was in attendance a body of interpreters who translated the resolutions, and gave a summary of the speeches made in the three different languages.

At seven o'clock on Monday evening we all assembled in the great hall of the Buchhändlerhaus for a banquet given by the Börsenverein der deutschen Buchhändler.

The hall, which is about the same size as the saloon at the Hotel Cecil in which the Publishers and Booksellers' dinner was held last May, is a handsome and well-decorated building, but is somewhat deficient in acoustic properties.

The proceedings were in all respects so different from those to which we are accustomed in England that it may be well to give a brief account of them, as a type of all the banquets which we attended.

The menu was as follows:

Schildkröten Suppe.
Rindslede mit jungen Gemüsen.
Gebirgsforelle mit Butter und neuen Kartoffeln.
Stangenspargel mit gebackenen Kalbsbröschchen und Zunge.
Metzer Poularde mit Kompott und Salat.
Fürst Pückler Butter und Käse.
Dessert.

The toasts were given, not after the dinner and from the speaker's place at the table as in England, but between the courses, and the speeches were delivered from a pulpit (called eine Tribune), with sounding board and red velvet desk complete, placed in the centre of one of the longer walls of the room.

The process of being led to this pulpit, not by a 'holy poker' but by an official of the dinner committee, produced peculiar and mingled thought and skill in equilibrium. In the course of this supper a large wine-case was placed in the centre of the floor, and from this point of vantage several excellent speeches, including one from M. Émile Bruylant, president of the Second Congress, were delivered.

The Bierabend on Wednesday evening, in the vast hall of the Zoologischer Garten, was a great event, to which we had looked forward with special interest not unmingled with misgivings. We naturally assumed that Lager Bier would form the staple refreshment, and in this we were not mistaken. Endless relays of this most insidious and enticing beverage were brought in, and meanwhile we were entertained with a few speeches and some admirable glees and part-songs given by the 'Thomanerchor,' composed of the scholars of an old educational foundation, Die Thomas-Schule. To the older Londoners present the entertainment could not fail to recall 'Evans's' in its best days, but in a magnified and glorified form.

The banquet of Wednesday was given by the German, Austrian, and Swiss publishers in the Palmengarten, where we had one of those finished discourses from M. Brunetière which members of past Congresses have always regarded as an oratorical and intellectual treat. If a criticism be allowed, it is that all the banquets were held in buildings too large to be filled by a single voice, and that consequently in no case was a speech distinctly heard by all the company.

But to return to the serious work of the Congress, for serious and hard work had to be done every day by all, and especially by the President and Vice - Presidents, who, both in Leipzig and Berlin, were called upon to hold long private sésances to discuss and settle certain difficult points which arose in the course of the business.

It is not necessary here to give a more formal recital of the various papers read; to the English Trade those of most importance and interest dealt with the question of gathering into the fold of the Berne Convention countries which have hitherto held aloof, such as, e.g., the United States, Austria-Hungary, and the Netherlands. These papers were read by Herr Otto Mühlbrecht of Berlin and Dr. Trübner of Strasburg, and gave rise to interesting discussions.

Mr. Heinemann originated an interesting debate on the question of sending out books 'on sale or return,' but it is doubtful if this can lead at present to any practical results. Generally speaking, the German publisher does nearly all his business on this principle; the bookseller consequently trades to a large extent on the publishers' capital, and pushes his wares with the public, thus relieving the publisher of the necessity of the extensive and expensive advertising which is incumbent on his English confrère.

DELEGATES AT THE LEIPZIG PUBLISHERS' CONGRESS

sensations on the one hand of being called upon to preach a sermon, and on the other of being a condemned culprit on the way to the scaffold.

Toasts and courses of the dinner thus went on in alternate order, varied at one time by an amusing topical song—'Verlagsbetrachtungen bei Tisch'—specially written for the occasion, in which all the company joined, till close on midnight, when some of the more strenuous spirits adjourned to Auerbach's cellar or some similar place of entertainment and reunion.

On Tuesday evening we were indulged in a special concert given at the Gewandhaus by the full orchestra, and those who heard Haydn's Symphony in G sharp (the four movements) and the overture to the 'Tannhäuser,' are not likely soon to forget the perfect rendering of them.

This concert was succeeded by a peripatetic supper, which, though sumptuous, was eaten under difficulties. On entering the room each guest was provided with a plate, knife and fork, and napkin, and an abundance of food of all sorts but to eat, drink, clink glasses, walk about, and return a hearty handshake about every second minute, was a task requiring considerable fore-

This practice differs toto caló from that to which we are accustomed in England, and, whatever may be the merits and defects of the different systems, to make any radical change would involve a revolution in the training and customs of booksellers and their assistants, such as could not be effected in less than a generation.

In all these matters the Congress could only debate and pass resolutions embodying pious hopes and wishes. On one subject only can it issue decrees and that is in regard to the Permanent Bureau which has been a standing dish at all Congresses. It was discussed in Paris in 1896, at Brussels in 1897, and was provisionally founded in London in 1899.

For two years Mr. Fairholme laboured with the utmost assiduity and tact to bring about an entente cordiale between the various countries, but owing partly to the constant and almost incredible delays on the part of some of the adherents in giving definite answers to repeated questions, partly to the reluctance of some of them to agree to any basis of proportionate division of cost, progress was but slow. A foundation was however laid, and the Börsenverein offered—most generously—to carry on and finance the work of the Permanent Bureau in Leipzig from this year till the next Congress in Milan in 1904.

The English delegates were prepared to accept this proposal without hesitation, but in some other quarters the desire that the Bureau should be established on neutral territory was so strong that a new solution of the problem had to be sought.

M. Henri Morel, the veteran labourer in the cause of International Copyright, was present at the Congress, and acted the part of the deus ex machinâ by offering to superintend the work of the office gratuitously, if it were established in Berne.

After a long and somewhat difficult debate this amended scheme was carried on Thursday, and the expense of the Bureau will be guaranteed by the different countries agreeing to it, for a period of three years at any rate.

So ended the general work of the Congress, and, among all the agreeable recollections impressed on our memories, I am sure none is more distinct than our admiration for the tact, energy, and unfailing good nature with which the President, Herr Albert Brockhaus, fulfilled his most delicate and arduous duties. A born organiser, an accomplished linguist, he was always at hand when wanted, always ready for any emergency, always prepared with a kind and cheery word for us all. No man more thoroughly earned the cordial vote of thanks which wound up the proceedings than did our good friend Albert Brockhaus.

On Friday we went to Berlin, and in the evening we had our last Festmahl given by the Korporation der Berliner Buchhändler in the Palmengarten—and a magnificent dinner it was.

I need not occupy your space with an account of the excursions to the sights of Leipzig and Berlin, to Potsdam and Sans Souci, and to Wan See—are they not written in the Handbooks of Murray and others?—because during a great part of them Mr. Macmillan and I were engaged along with certain other Presidents and Vice-Presidents in a long committee meeting at the Hôtel Bristol, working out the preliminary details of the Permanent Bureau.

There have been, and possibly still are, some of our countrymen who regard such Congresses as nothing more than elaborate 'beanfeasts,' but to those who have followed and examined them more closely, it is evident that this view is a mistaken one. With each successive meeting there has been displayed a closer and more serious attention to business and a growing desire to learn the methods of other countries with a view to concerted action when circumstances are opportune. It is to be one of the duties of the Permanent Bureau to regulate and control the subjects for discussion so as to eliminate what is redundant, useless, or undesirable, and so we may hope that the next Congress, which by the kind invitation of the Italian publishers is to meet at Milan in 1904, may fully maintain the advance in practical results.

JOHN MURRAY.

THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS' CONGRESS.

The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, June 15, contained a report of the first two days' proceedings of the Congress.

THE THIRD DAY'S SITTING.

In Section B the President invited Herr Otto Mühlbrecht to say a few words in support of his printed report lying before the Congress 'On the attitude of the Netherlands regarding a Literary Convention with Germany with respect to the Berne Literary Convention.' Herr Mühlbrecht has devoted more than thirty years to the question of a Literary Convention between Germany and the Netherlands, and his numerous writings on this subject are well known to the trade in both countries. A strong party in the Netherlands supports the efforts of the Germans and other foreigners to set aside the existing freedom of reprinting and translating foreign books in the Netherlands. The Dutch Government is also willing to ratify a convention; but, unfortunately, a large majority of the Dutch Union for the Promotion of the Interests of the Book Trade, at its seventy-seventh annual meeting, August 14, 1894, defeated the proposal of its Commission that the Netherlands join the Berne Convention, or at least enter into separate Literary Conventions with other countries.

M. Paul Ollendorff, Paris, supported Herr Mühlbrecht's report. After MM. Belinfante, the Hague, Bonnier, Stockholm, and Credner, Leipzig, had spoken, the Congress accepted the following resolution:

'A common understanding prevails that, although the several resolutions for obtaining the accession of new countries to the Berne Union are variously conceived, it ought to be reserved to the body entrusted with the carrying out of the resolutions of the Congress to choose such a method and such means as may be considered most suited to the attainment of the desired result.'

The acceptance of this resolution gave the President the opportunity of thanking Herr Mühlbrecht for his exertions in this matter. He also thanked MM. Vandevelde, Brussels, and Ollendorff, Paris, and expressed the sincere wish that united exertions might soon lead to a satisfactory result.

In Section B Herr Dr. Alfred Giesecke read a report 'On the Customs and their Relations to Books with regard to New Treaties of Commerce.' This report, like all others, is printed. An accompanying table gives an excellent survey of the imports and exports of books, maps, engravings, pictures, music, &c., and the respective quantities of these productions. Dr. Giesecke, in a short speech, proposed the following motion: 'The Congress resolves that the national Unions ought to take all possible steps at the places in question in various countries to remove the customs duty on books where in force, and to prevent the duty from being imposed where it appears to threaten.'

This resolution was carried by a large majority in Section B. It was then brought before the general meeting of the Congress, and, after an animated debate, in which MM. Treves (Milan), Bailly-Baillière (Madrid), Heinemann (London), Koenig (Vienna), and Bonnier (Stockholm), took part, was accepted.

FOURTH AND LAST DAY.

On Thursday, June 13, at 3 P.M., the President, Herr Albert Brockhaus, opened the last general sitting of the Congress in the great hall of the German Booksellers' House.

The following resolution was passed:

The Fourth International Publishers' Congress authorises the Permanent Bureau (about to be founded) to take such necessary steps as may induce the Austrian and Hungarian Government to join the Berne Union for the protection of works of literature and art.

The following resolutions were also accepted:

1. It is in the interest of the book trade, and not less in that of authors and the public, that the book trade should spread even into the smallest towns of all lands, and that it be carried on by well-trained and educated booksellers.

2. A strongly organised miscellaneous book trade is the most effective and at the same time the cheapest instrument for the dissemination of books. The suppression or deduction of discount to customers signifies only an apparent rise of price to the public.

3. The Congress is of opinion that the only effectual means of maintaining and promoting such a book trade is strict adherence to the retail prices as fixed by the publishers.

4. In the general interest, the Congress advises the booksellers of all countries to support the movement in favour of the obligatory maintenance of retail prices.

The Congress decided to present the protocol of the debates on the Russian copyright project and its relation to the Berne Convention (through the Permanent Bureau) to the Imperial Russian Government for consideration, and to the other Governments for their information.

The Congress express the wish that the Permanent Bureau (about to be founded) will make inquiry as to the practices followed in different countries with regard to the supply of books 'on sale or return' or to fixed account, and lay the result before the next Congress.

The Permanent Bureau is authorised to represent to the Governments concerned that

(a) The countries which have not hitherto become parties to the Berne Convention should be urged on every favourable opportunity, and especially on the conclusion of future commercial treaties with those countries, to join it;

(b) On the occasion of future legislation stress be laid on the utmost possible international uniformity in the protection of the rights of authors and publishers;

(c) Artists' and publishers' rights in works of the graphic arts and in photographs should be defined or modified by law, as soon as possible, in conformity with the modern development of technical methods and of legal standards;

(d) The Congress begs Mr. Putnam to urge upon the Copyright League in the United States that a modification be inserted in the new Copyright Amendment Bill to be laid before the American Congress, whereby the conditions of the reservation of copyright in works of art may either be abolished or simplified; or, if this be impossible, that the notification may at least be put on the back of the work of art.

Then followed resolutions in favour of establishing technical libraries in all countries where there are book trade associations.

Proposals for carrying out the resolutions voted at the Congresses were then dealt with, the most important being the establishment of the Permanent Bureau, to which we shall refer fully at a future date.

The proceedings concluded by votes of thanks; the unanimous election of M. Ferdinand Brunetière as an honorary member of the Congress; and the equally unanimous acceptance of the invitation given by Signore Commendatore Emilio Treves, in the name of the 'Associazione tipografico-libreria italiana,' to the Congress to hold its fifth meeting at Milan in 1894.

J. K. HUYSMANS' NEW BOOK.*

It was no easy task M. Huysmans set himself when he undertook to write the life of that marvellous personage Sainte Lydwine de Schiedam. True it is there exist three lives of the saint, successively written by three of her contemporaries: Jan Gerlac, sacristan of the Augustinian monastery of Windehem; Jan Brugman, a Minorite of the Observance, who amplified Gerlac's biography and rendered it from Low German into Latin; and last, but not least, Thomas à Kempis, one of the reputed authors of the 'Imitation of Christ,' who also used Brugman's narrative, but embodied in it some further particulars gathered from her entourage in Schiedam. At the outset of his undertaking M. Huysmans was confronted with the difficulty of attempting to disentangle the skein of scenes and incidents which Jan Brugman had judged inconvenient to relate in chronological order, preferring, as more edifying, to group scenes in the saint's life according to qualities attributed to her; and, as the same plan was followed both by Gerlac and à Kempis, the author found himself obliged to relinquish his attempt at chronological sequence. Lydwine, Lydwigis, Lydia, or Lydwina, all which names are derived from the Flemish verb lyden, or German verb leiden, signifying to suffer, and also to be patient, was born at Schiedam in 1380. Both her father, Pierre, and her mother, Petronilla, belonged to respectable families, and had seen better days; but Pierre at this time occupied the humble position of night-watchman. The child was devout, and although servant to her mother when seven years old, with little leisure, she yet found time when shopping to say a prayer in the church. At fifteen she was a good-looking girl, had many admirers, and her father wished her to marry, but she objected that her desire was to devote herself to Christ, and that if constrained to marry she would pray for some repulsive deformity to put her suitors to flight. Soon after her health began to fail, and she was so weak that she stayed indoors. But, one very frosty day in January 1395, when the Schie and all the canals were frozen and everybody on the ice, some young girls prevailed upon Lydwine to go skating with them, saying the fresh air would do her good. As she rose to her feet, after putting on her skates, one of her companions, skating very swiftly, rushed upon her, and she fell on a sharp piece of ice which broke one of her false ribs. She was carried home and laid upon her bed, which she hardly ever again quitted. Then began a series of painful maladies from which Lydwine suffered with exemplary fortitude and resignation for 38 years, and which are circumstantially described in this deeply interesting and sympathetically written life. M. Huysmans prefaces his recital with a startlingly vivid panorama of the deplorable condition of contemporary Europe, when the world was out of joint, war and pestilence, including that dire malady the Black Death, stalked abroad, and the Church was divided against itself, having two heads—one at Rome the other at Avignon. This work, in which the author shows himself as a master biographer and historiographer, and, at the same time, as a mystic who is not afraid to investigate a problem so difficult as the mystery of pain, seems destined to occupy a prominent place in the literature of religious biography.

A PLEASANT NOTE FROM YOUNG JAPAN.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Excuse me to try to write you a very little letter, if I do not spell the words all right.

MR. KYUTARŌ, TAMURA.

I thank heartily you that I may read your paper on such distant country by your grace. I having studied English only two years at the National English studying Society in Tokyo, the capital of my country, I can not understand it well, while there is no teacher of English in my town, Miharu, so I have to read and to ponder the meanings of the words by Anglo-Japanese dictionary, but it amuse me very much.

I hope you will not be displeased if there are some impolite words for imperfection in learning.

Hoping you will accept my photograph,

I remain, dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

KYUTARŌ, TAMURA.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, Mr. C. J. Longman in the chair, the sum of £95. 12s. 4d. was voted for the relief of 56 members and widows of members.

THE BISHOP ON AUTHORS.

The Bishop of London was the guest of the Authors' Club last Saturday night, Mr. Anthony Hope occupying the chair.

Dr. Ingram said he did not claim to be an author, or if he were they could have all his books for 4d. each. Down in Bethnal Green he never despised the 'twopenny dramatic'; that always drew when nothing else would. The workers liked to be cheered up—he liked to be cheered up himself—and he looked to the authors to do great good in this great city.

He had often been absorbed in the stories of their chairman. After reading one of his books he went back to his work on the morrow a new man. The books of the members of the Authors' Club helped the clergy with their sermons. Personally, he learnt more from their books in the managing of large congregations than from anything else, save the study of the Bible. Authors had a most extraordinary influence upon the morals and the tone of this great city.—Daily Mail.

AN APPEAL.

We are asked to bring under the notice of our readers the case of Mr. James Drummond, who fourteen months ago was suddenly struck down by paralysis. He is paralysed in the whole lower half of his body, and lies helpless in bed, while his intellect is as bright as ever.

Mr. Drummond is the son of a well-known Scotch bookseller, Mr. P. R. Drummond, of Perth, author of 'Perthshire in By-gone Days' and other writings, and is himself a man of considerable literary taste. He edited the life of Robert Nicol, the Scottish poet, left in MS. by his father; and was for some time a contributor to the columns of the Athenæum.

Mr. Drummond served his apprenticeship with the well-known firm of Edmonston & Douglas, booksellers, Edinburgh. He was for some years with Messrs. Blackwood & Sons, publishers; afterwards with Messrs. Henry S. King & Co., W. B. Whittingham & Co., and ultimately for about eighteen years with Mr. Edward Stanford, in whose employment he was when his health broke down.

Beyond an allowance from the Booksellers' Provident Institution and the Booksellers' Society of Edinburgh his income has ceased, and what is now asked for is the kind sympathy and help of friends in the trade in raising such a sum as it is hoped may relieve him of anxiety and want during what may be left him of life.

Subscriptions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by John Macniven (Macniven & Wallace), 138 Princes Street, Edinburgh; J. Gardner Hitt, 37 George Street, Edinburgh; Edmund S. Kitto, 8 St. Bride Street, London, E.C.; Hugh Rees, 124 Pall Mall, London, S.W.

HOME READERS AT WINCHESTER.

The tenth summer assembly of the National Home Reading Union opened at Winchester on Saturday, June 22. The object of the Union is to guide readers of all ages in the choice of books. For mutual help and interest the Union, where possible, makes some centre where the members can group themselves, and thereby assist each other. Winchester was chosen this year, consequent on the millenary of King Alfred, for the visit of the society, and on Saturday evening, at the Guildhall, the first day of the society's visit was celebrated by a reception in the Banqueting Hall by the Mayor of Winchester. The guests on arrival were presented by the City Champion, a gentleman resplendent in a white busby of great size and said to be of historic interest. Music and light refreshment filled up the evening, with intervals of conversation, opened by 'Have you read this?' and answered by 'You surely don't waste your time over his books!' Altogether about 200 people were present. The Mayor addressed the assembly, welcoming them to the ancient city of Winchester; and Dr. Alexander Hill, the Master of Downing College, Cambridge, responded.—Daily Graphic.

IN MEMORIAM.

HERMANN GRIMM.

Everyone has heard of the Brothers Grimm, whose collection of German fairy tales, called 'Kinder- und Hausmärchen,' had such a legitimate and enduring success in Germany, and, appearing in an English translation with George Cruikshank's illustrations, became equally popular in this country. These brothers were named Jakob and Wilhelm Grimm. Hermann Grimm, who died at Berlin on June 16, was the son of Wilhelm Grimm, and was born at Cassel in 1828. He began the study of Law at Berlin University; but soon added that of philology, following the example set by his father and uncle; and afterwards studied history. From 1872 until a comparatively recent date he was professor of the history of art at his alma mater. His principal writings are a 'Life of Michael Angelo,' a translation of Vasari's 'Life of Raphael,' an edition of Goethe's 'Correspondence with a Child' (Bettina Brentano, afterwards Von Arnim, whose daughter, Gisela von Arnim, he married), and also an edition of the Brothers Grimm's popular tales.

GUIDE-BOOKS.

Our note on the absence of sporting information in some guide-books has prompted a reply from an experienced traveller, who observes that 'what these handbooks, unsurpassed as some are so far as regards historical and archaeological information, really require to bring them into harmony with the altered conditions of travel is the abolition of the obsolete routes system. This arrangement, while well adapted for travellers of means and leisure of the old school, journeying perhaps in their own carriage, is altogether unsuited for this age of rapid travel when the remotest corners of Europe are served by railways. As for the insertion of details about sport, information about shooting and fishing, golf, cycling, &c., is given in the half-crown series on foreign cities recently started by Messrs. A. & C. Black, of which "Cairo of To-day" is probably the best known.'

TRADE CHANGES.

Mr. James Finch, recently with Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co., has commenced business at 33 Paternoster Row, as a publisher of miscellaneous books in leather bindings. Mr. Finch has had eighteen years' experience of the trade, and, having travelled for ten years, is well known in town and country. The first publication of the new firm will, by special arrangement with Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited, be a re-issue, in four volumes, of the illustrated edition of Green's 'Short History of the English People.' Mr. J. Rushworth will travel for Messrs. James Finch & Co., Limited, in London.

Mr. F. W. Rowley, who for nearly eighteen years has been with Messrs. T. Miles & Co., of 95 Upper Street, Islington, N., has accepted an engagement with Messrs. F. Warne & Co. to represent them, in both town and country, in succession to Mr. Finch.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston, Limited, beg to notify their friends that in future all London letters and orders should be addressed to them at their new premises, 7 Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

THE RIVERS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Messrs. Cassell & Company are publishing in fortnightly parts, price 7d. net, their great work 'The Rivers of Great Britain,' descriptive, historical, pictorial, beautifully illustrated from original drawings by eminent artists, and by a series of exquisite Rembrandt photogravure plates specially prepared for this edition. 'The Rivers of Great Britain' is a work which occupies an entirely unique position. It describes in a comprehensive and popular manner the rivers of England, Scotland, and Wales, and contains a profusion of beautiful illustrations.

The work with which this serial commences—'The Rivers of the South and West Coasts'—can now only be obtained at a cost of £2 2s. In this new edition it will cost but seven shillings. An important feature of the new issue of 'The Rivers of Great Britain' will be a series of splendid Rembrandt photogravure plates, which the publishers have prepared from special photographs of the most famous river scenery of our land. A photogravure will appear in each part. Part I. is now ready.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. Adam and Charles Black.—

'Poems of English History, 61-1714 A.D.,' edited by J. A. Nicklin, B.A. In this handy, clearly printed, and well illustrated little book, which forms one of the publishers' 'English Historical Text Books,' Mr. Nicklin gives a capital anthology of English history from the days of Queen Boadicea to those of Queen Anne. The volume comprises three distinct parts: from Boadicea to Richard II.; from Henry IV. to Mary I.; and from Elizabeth to Anne. Brief biographical notes on the authors and questions to test the pupil's knowledge are appended to each part; and these, used in the light of the careful directions contained in the introduction, should render the study of these poems alike pleasant and profitable.

From the same.—'Famous Englishmen,' Book I. 'Alfred to Elizabeth,' by John Finmore. This book is the outcome of a suggestion in one of the recent schemes of the Board of Education, that lessons on great Englishmen are suitable as an historical course for the middle division of a school. Many teachers working in schools where divisions are grouped having expressed a wish for a couple of books to form a complete two years' course of Readers, Mr. Finmore has prepared two books to meet this want. The first of these two books is now before us. It contains nineteen lives, illustrated with fifty-seven well-executed engravings and maps, is clearly printed and strongly bound, and seems well adapted to the needs of teachers and pupils.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'The Little Flower of Jesus: being the Autobiography of Sister Thérèse, of the Child Jesus and the Holy Face, Carmelite Nun,' translated from the French 'Histoire d'une Âme,' by Michael Henry Dziewicki. Many lessons are to be gathered from this volume, possibly some not altogether intended by its sponsors. We cannot but think, though we say it with all deference of so saintly a life, that a spirit of exaggeration is shown throughout the work. In unswerving devotion to her faith and complete renunciation of the worldly pleasures of this life, the record of Sister Thérèse, however, affords a noteworthy example of religious piety; and her thorough self-denial can only arouse sentiments of the utmost veneration and respect.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'A Short History of the Greeks from the Earliest Times to B.C. 146,' by Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, M.A. The difficulties in the way of writing a short history of a country like Hellas, with its three great races and its many separate States, are obvious. Limits of space necessitate the curtailing or omitting of much that would otherwise be deemed entitled to a position in a larger work. Mr. Shuckburgh, however, has successfully and satisfactorily accomplished his task by choosing for topics to be dwelt upon those which best illustrate the political life and intellectual activities of the Greeks, whether living in Greece itself or 'in the larger Greece of Italy, Sicily, and Asia.' Of course, details as to particular cities and districts has necessarily suffered; and the author regrets that he has not been able to treat the history of Hellas in such a wide Hellenic spirit as he had wished, because he 'found it impossible to avoid giving Athens the lion's share in the story.' This history, which is written in a clear and animated style, is well printed, beautifully illustrated, has some excellent maps and plans, a good index, and may be recommended not only to historical students but to all desirous of reading a concise and accurate chronicle of a country to whose people and literature the world owes so much.

From the same.—'A Manual of School Hygiene,' by Edward W. Hope, M.D., and Edgar A. Browne, F.R.C.S.E. This work is especially designed for teachers in day schools, the object being to 'set forth in plain language the guiding principles of the hygiene of childhood so far as it is affected by the circumstances of school life.' The volume is divided into two parts, the first (by Professor Hope) treating of the outside conditions affecting children, such as the arrangement of the school buildings, the question of ventilation, food and clothing, epidemics and accidents, &c., while in the second (by Mr. Browne) the management of the child as a growing and living creature is considered. The entire book is written from a very practical point of view, and nothing is urged that is not within the power of teachers under present regulations to accomplish. In particular we may draw attention to the sound advice given in regard to the care of the eye. Teachers would do well to take a word of instruction themselves by studying this volume, which is published in the well-known 'Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges.' It is illustrated with a number of plans and sections of school-buildings, diagrams, &c.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'The Millionaire Mystery,' by Fergus Hume. Like most of Mr. Hume's novels, 'The Millionaire Mystery' betrays signs of hurried writing and construction. It has evidently also been written with an eye to serial publication, and suffers from the necessity of ending almost every chapter with a situation. Of crude sensational incidents the story possesses no lack. In the first place, the body of the heroine's father—i.e. the millionaire—is stolen from the family vault. Scarcely has the heroine recovered from this blow when she hears of the murder of his intimate friend, the doctor who attended him during his last illness. Next, the body of the intimate friend is found reposing in the coffin where the remains of the millionaire should be. Then a 'slight dark bright-eyed man, accurately dressed, but foreign-looking,' makes his appearance, and informs the heroine that the millionaire was not really her father, but that he—the 'accurately dressed' gentleman—is. As if these extraordinary events were not sufficient to distract any ordinarily constituted young woman, intelligence afterwards comes to hand that the millionaire is not actually dead, but living down at Brighton under an assumed name; that he is supposed to have committed a murder at Kingston, Jamaica, which will account for the ingenious spiriting away of his corpse; that the heroine is not the daughter of the stranger, but of his deceased brother, whom he is impersonating; and so on—quite a host of hastily devised flimsy surprises being sprung upon the reader in rapid succession. Some explanation is given at the conclusion, but there are many things that pass all comprehension, and these are discreetly ignored. The only attempts at character-portrayal in the novel are supplied by a rather amusing, elocutionising scamp named Cicero Gramp, and the village sexton Jarks, the last named being apparently a descendant of Durdles in 'Edwin Drood,' and, like that eccentric individual, constant in his colloquial use of the third person.

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'Cinderella,' by S. R. Crockett. Deserting the paths of heroic adventure so recently trodden, Mr. Crockett has once again taken up the portraiture of homely Scotch life. No Joan of the Sword Hand or her counterpart figures in his present story, nor does the narrative progress to a constant accompaniment of gallant deeds and armour-ringing blows. It is difficult to say in which capacity we like Mr. Crockett best, whether as the ardent romancer or the painter of more modern life. One thing is certain, that for those who know and love the country beyond the Tweed Cinderella will possess a wondrous charm. It is steeped to the very core in Scottish realism, and we are confronted by national characteristics and peculiarities of thought on almost every page. Poor little Cinderella, as her name would imply, has a troubled career. We follow her experiences from the time when as a little girl of seven she is maltreated by her ill-bred cousins the Torphichans, with the sympathy that such a truthful, tender-hearted maiden is bound to inspire. These Torphichans occupy a prominent position in the narrative. Dr. Torphichan steals from Cinderella—whose real name is Hester Stirling—a number of exceedingly valuable rubies which her father has brought from North Barmah, and thereafter Hester, quite unconscious of the way she has been robbed, becomes the 'poor relation' of the family. But happily she still possesses one of the rubies which was given to her by her father as a child to play with, and this circumstance develops into a powerful factor of the story. The plot, as may perhaps be gathered from this slight outline, is not strikingly novel, though quite calculated to hold the attention of the reader. It is in the types of character and the remarkable acquaintance shown with Scotch idiosyncrasies and forms of expression that the story chiefly excels. These, of course, we expect from Mr. Crockett, but we do not know that he has ever more forcibly shown his great talent in this direction. 'Megsy' Tipperlin, the embodiment of the old favoured Scotch domestic, is simply splendid; she and her old-time lover, Anders MacQuaker, quite stand out in their simple fidelity from the rest of the characters, and the chapter on 'Megsy's Romance' is one of the best in the book. We must confess to a preference for the broadly Scotch portraits in the story—the Duchess of Niddisdale, for instance—to the more Anglicised portion of the characters, though these are in many respects well done. Mr. Crockett's lively and vigorous style, however, is conspicuous throughout; he has breathed fresh life into old material, and has endowed his work with a set of living figures that from the heroine downwards can scarcely fail to attract.

From M. Armand Colin, Paris.—'Portraits Intimes,' fifth series, by M. Adolphe Brisson. This is the concluding volume of the series of pen portraits by M. Brisson which have been so popular in France. It contains an alphabetical index of all the names mentioned in the five volumes. The work as a whole will long remain of value as a mine of original information respecting modern French writers, artists, musicians, &c.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Sea of Fortune,' by Mrs. Robert Jocelyn (Hon. Mrs. Jocelyn). An unaffected, refined style distinguishes this novel, and adds greatly to the pleasure of its perusal. The events are not particularly exciting, but they gather interest from being thoroughly natural. A more charming heroine than Lady Elizabeth Woinmore could scarcely be found, and in her three lovers, John Selby, George Claxton, and Lord Begonia various differences of character are happily contrasted. The unsatisfying portion of Mrs. Jocelyn's novel is the ending—satisfactory enough, it is true, in the fact that Betty marries the right man, but hurried and inartistic in execution. The impression conveyed is that the author had become weary of her subject, and so determined thus abruptly to terminate the chronicle.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'The Separation of the Beresfords,' by Catherine Adams. Nine stories reprinted from the Argosy, Belgravia, the Strand, and other magazines, are grouped under this title, which is taken from the first of the series. 'The Separation of the Beresfords' is not particularly original in plot, the quarrels of a hasty-tempered man and his equally passionate wife having frequently before been employed by novelists to illustrate the adage that 'absence makes the heart grow fonder'; but the story is written with some liveliness, and the same may be said of the other contents of the volume.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.—'The After-glow of a Great Reign,' by the Right Rev. A. F. Winnington Ingram, D.D. The aim of these four addresses delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral may be stated in the Bishop's own words: 'Just as in the sunset a beautiful and tender after-glow remains long after the sun has set, so we are gathered to-day in the tender after-glow. And I propose that we should try and gather up one by one—to learn ourselves and to tell our children and the generations yet unborn, as some explanation of the marvellous influence which she exercised—some of the qualities of the Queen we have lost.' And so, in those four discourses, the Bishop tells us in simple language the lessons all may learn from 'the marvellous truthfulness,' the moral courage, the purity and the kindness of heart of the good and great Lady who in her sympathy was the Mother as well as the Queen of all her subjects far and near. It was fitting that these four addresses by the successor of the late regretted Bishop Creighton should be published, and they will doubtless be welcomed in this neat yet elegant little volume.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Instructive and Ornamental Paper Work: a Practical Book on making Flowers and many other articles for Artistic Decoration, together with a graduated course of Paper Folding and Cutting for Children from Five to Twelve Years of Age,' by Mrs. L. Walker. Commencing with very simple lessons this volume gradually leads the pupil on to the manufacture of some extremely beautiful specimens of artificial flowers. No doubt the manual, as pointed out, would be useful in the hands of the teacher of botany, but it should be remembered that having to make the specimens, though it would no doubt impress the facts on the pupil's mind, would entail a terrible waste of time, and the subject is wide enough already. But as a practical manual for the ordinary instruction of ornamental paper work we have every praise for Mrs. Walker's volume, and we think she has very creditably got over the difficulty of explaining her directions in language that shall be easily followed. The book is very well illustrated.

From the same.—'Open-air Gardening, the Culture of Hardy Flowers, Fruit and Vegetables,' edited by W. D. Drury, F.E.S. This is an abridgment of 'The Book of Gardening,' and is designed for that largely increasing proportion of the population which is interested in the culture of open-air plants and vegetables. The object has been to provide a practical book at a popular price which shall serve as guide and instructor to the amateur gardener. In the various chapters such branches of the subject as florists' flowers, roses, annuals and biennials, herbaceous perennials, rock plants, bulbs and tubers, trees and shrubs, fruit, vegetables, &c., are excellently treated, of the writers being Mr. James Douglas, Mr. Alan Wynne, Mr. J. M. Abbott, Mr. Mortimer Thorn, Mr. W. G. Baker, Mr. Trevor Monmouth, and the Editor. A large number of illustrations add to the value and beauty of the book, which is in every way well produced.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'John Vytal: a Tale of the Lost Colony,' by William Farquhar Payson. Rather more than three centuries ago the island of Roanoke, off the coast of old Virginia, was invaded by a number of colonists from this country, less than one hundred in all. What became of them eventually—whether they were massacred by hostile savages, or hospitably adopted into the neighbouring tribe of Hatteras Indians—is unknown to history. The mystery, however, affords plenty of opportunities to the writer of romance, and of these Mr. Payson has made full use. The centre figure of his story, John Vytal, is a man of rare courage and fighting strength, whose personality will appeal with irresistible force to the lover of heroic deeds and gallant bearing. Naturally he is principally animated in his brave actions by the love of a young and beautiful woman, and he is sufficiently disinterested in this, seeing that the lady is already married. Throughout the narrative Vytal wages war against his opponents with indomitable courage and sterling prowess, and in the end he comes out conqueror, though at a terrible cost. He is assisted in his exploits by two faithful adherents, Hugh Rouse and Roger Prat, whose honest devotion to their master is at times quite pathetic, while the poet, Kyt Marlowe, for the moment supposed to be absent from the Court of Queen Elizabeth, also forms one of the party. The story is well constructed and vigorously written, and its incidents are such as should readily absorb the interest of the reader.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Forest Folk,' by James Prior. It may be held not altogether derogatory to the merits of this story that it kept one tired reviewer out of his bed until the morning light stole in at the windows and the awakening sounds in the street had that peculiar distinctness which is associated with the early hours. But it must not be inferred from this that Mr. Prior's book is free from faults. The construction is in several instances almost clumsy, the overcrowded incidents are wanting in variety (this being especially true in regard to the troubles overtaking Tant Rideout) and the action frequently drags. But over all there hangs a fine spirit of human feeling, of broad sympathies and genuine purpose. The character of Nell Rideout, the chief personage of the story, is capably drawn, and her environment emphasises the independence and fearlessness of her disposition. From the moment of the reader's first introduction to her, when attired like a ploughboy she is at work on the family farm, she takes thorough possession of his attention and never relaxes her hold until the conclusion of the story is reached. All these 'Forest Folk' have an indescribable charm; they are so completely typical of country life that reading about them serves to revive remembrances of the broad spreading uplands and the scent of the newly turned furrows. The daily routine at the Low Farm, where Nell, her sister Tish, Tant, and the deaf grandmother live, is depicted with a natural simplicity that seems to set the actual scene before our eyes, and we are almost sorry when the troubles arise because they disturb the delicious sense of quietude that pervades the farmstead. The village, too, with its inevitable alehouse and yokel frequenters, is most appreciatively described, and the scene of the Methodist chapel service is quite worthy of Thomas Hardy. We have afforded no inkling of the plot or told how a love passion enters into Nell's life, how it gradually widens and deepens and what tragic events it gives rise to. Readers with a taste for the study of rural character must obtain the book for themselves, and we can promise them hearty enjoyment in its perusal.

From Mr. John Long.—'Paul Le Maistre,' by Frédéric Carrel. The purpose of this novel, if purpose it has, would seem to be to show that life is hollow; that there is no such thing as sincerity or disinterested friendship in the world; that everyone, with the exception of the few who make a sacrifice of their lives, is actuated by motives of greed and self-aggrandisement. It is rather a pitiful view to take of life, and in the present instance it has a miserable ending. The hero, Paul Le Maistre, accompanied by his sister, comes up to London to prosecute his claims to a valuable estate. So long as there is a prospect of his obtaining this he is made much of by distinguished and titled society, imposed upon by solicitors and others, but so soon as he has failed he is universally awarded the cold shoulder. Persistently misfortune follows misfortune, and he sinks lower and lower. Everyone is willing to make use of him so long as he can further their individual prospects in life, but once this has been done he is conveniently lost sight of. The Socialists, for instance, are anxious to incite him to the writing of an article derogatory to the interest of the newspaper with which he is connected, but when he loses his situation through his foolishness they refuse in any way to help him. Even the friends who cling to him are not without their evil influences. Chief among them is a Syrian girl who is willing to sacrifice everything for his sake, who places herself entirely at his mercy, and eventually succeeds in her object, but yet when all is done cannot retain a hold over his affections. His sister, too, falls a prey to the designs of an unscrupulous scoundrel who has not the advantage even of a handsome appearance or engaging manners. The story ends in unutterable gloom. It is clever undoubtedly, but conceived in so morbid a spirit that only those readers who are partial to Ibsenite studies of life will derive relaxation from its pages.

From the same.—'A Woman Derelict,' by May Crommelin. A total loss of memory following on an injury to the brain has no doubt been used as the motive power of a novel before now, though we cannot recall any special instance of this. Some years ago Mr. Edward Terry produced a very amusing play, 'In Chancery,' founded on this idea, the leading character being quite unable after a railway 'smash' to recollect who he was and what his past life had been. Anyhow, Miss Crommelin at once arrests attention by a device of this kind, and it says much for the fascination of the mystery that it can successfully tide the reader over the chapters of great discursiveness that follow. 'A Woman Derelict' can scarcely be considered a closely studied work, but by reason of its main episode it remains interesting. The reader is anxious throughout to know who Elinor Grey really is. That she turns out to be the wife of a handsome distinguished nobleman is quite in keeping with a sentimental conception of the world's events. Finding that her husband during her disappearance from his life has married again, the woman derelict sacrifices herself to his prospects, and eventually she comes by her death in an unavailing effort on behalf of a friend. We are afraid Miss Crommelin has scarcely made full use of her opportunities in this story.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Rural Readers, Book I,' by Vincent T. Murché, F.R.G.S. These Reading Books are intended to be used in conjunction with the author's object lesson manuals, a notice of which appeared in these columns some few weeks back. Their aim is 'to meet the children on their own level, and by simplicity of language, simplicity of ideas, and full sympathy with child nature, to arouse new interest in the subject, and so drive home the teaching of the oral lessons.' They are in no way designed as a substitute for the oral lessons, but rather to supplement and emphasise the knowledge thus gained. The subjects of course are much the same as in the previous volumes, the air, sky, sun, clouds, rain, horses, cows, sheep, farm produce, and so forth; and the lessons for the most part take the form of a conversation between a farmer and his three boys, with a summary at the close of each. The little book, which is well illustrated, should be productive of much useful teaching.

From the same.—'Macmillan's New History Readers on the Concentric Plan.' Part I.—Junior. Arrangement, illustrations, and printing of this little work are alike excellent, and the letterpress is written with a full knowledge of the requirements of young people. The book closes with a list of important events and their dates. Messrs. Macmillan also publish 'A Summary' of this volume, in which the information, carefully condensed and shorn of all illustrations, is reduced to about one-eighth of the space.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'Madge's Book of Cookery and Home Management.' There are many good cookery books; but all are not suited to the needs of persons with small incomes. Such is not the case with the book before us. The editor of 'Madge's Book of Cookery' claims for it that economy has been carefully studied in the recipes, and that she has provided an unusual number dealing with vegetables and inexpensive kinds of fish. From the brief examination we have been able to bestow upon some of the recipes it contains, which number over one thousand, we are of opinion that the existence of 'Madge's Book of Cookery' is fully justified. The work is in two parts. Part I. is exclusively devoted to cookery of all kinds. Part II. deals with Home Management, and is replete with hints for meals, menus, foods for various seasons and circumstances, and valuable instructions for the sick room, nursery, and for domestic economy. It is a distinctly useful book for housewives.

From Messrs. Elkin Mathews.—'Sea Verse,' by Guy Bridges. A small volume containing some twenty lyrics; for the most part about sea, seashore, and fisher-folk. There are some picturesque descriptions and gentle thoughts in these pieces, which afford a pleasant half-hour's reading.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Sir Harry Parkes in China,' by Stanley Lane-Poole, M.A., Litt.D., Professor of Arabic at Trinity College, Dublin, with a portrait and maps. In 1894 Professor Stanley Lane-Poole wrote a biography of Sir Harry Parkes in collaboration (in so far as the Japanese portion of his career is concerned) with Mr. F. Victor Dickins, C.B., and that exhaustive recital of the eventful life of Harry Smith Parkes—bereft of both parents when five years old, sent out to China in 1841 to learn the language and become a Government interpreter, and present as a boy of fourteen at the signing of the first European Treaty ever made with China on board H.M.S. 'Cornwallis' at Nanking, Aug. 97, 1842—was duly published in two large volumes. But Professor Lane-Poole believes that a briefer and more concise account of the brilliant career of one who served through all grades of the very difficult Consular service in China at four of the five Treaty Ports then opened to foreigners, and who died in harness as Minister Plenipotentiary at Peking only sixteen years since, may not only be a record of a useful and instructive life, but also serve as a handbook to the China Question. Hence this handy and brightly written volume. The author tells us that a Chinese reformer 'who has held high office and knows Europe, remarked to a friend that Sir Harry Parkes was "the only European who ever thoroughly understood the Chinese."' Every Englishman should read this book, in which he will see how Parkes carried on a long struggle with official obstruction. For, as the author says, official China is the root of the difficulty, and the only hope for the country is that the official element shall be changed. We also see what mistakes were made by not insisting on our just rights in 1842, 1858, and 1860. "All these mistakes," says our author, 'were the fruit of that timid vacillation of the British Government which forms its only continuity of policy in the Far East. They drew down upon us the contempt of the astute statesmen of China, and brought upon our heads the imminent tragedy of 1900. Our representatives in China, while contending against the official element there, were continually hampered by the peace-at-any-price party at home, and even by such high-placed officials as the Lords Aberdeen, Grey, and Russell; but Lord Palmerston stood forth as a conspicuous example of what a British Foreign Minister should be. While home on leave in 1850 Parkes was summoned to an interview with 'Pam' at the Foreign Office. The young interpreter was somewhat surprised and not a little proud. 'He had expected to meet a master, but with all his prepossessions he was astonished at the grasp of Chinese affairs which the Minister showed.' The volume contains excellent maps, an index, and a portrait of the loyal, resolute, and courageous hero of a history far more strange and enthralling than any romance, because it is at once honest and true.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Murray's Handy Classical Maps: Græcia,' edited by G. B. Grundy, M.A. Two maps are included in this part, respectively representing Northern and Southern Græcia. As aids to the student they are beyond all praise, and their extreme accuracy and general excellence of production reflects the greatest credit on the editor. With such explanatory guides as these by his side the reader of the Greek classics will find his occupation both lightened and rendered more interesting.

From the same.—'Chamionix and the Range of Mont Blanc,' by Edward Whymper; 'The Valley of Zermatt and the Matterhorn,' by the same. Of the value of these two guides, which have now respectively reached a sixth and fifth edition, it is scarcely necessary to speak. They are each replete with information conveyed in a manner that is as different from the style of the ordinary guide-book as polished metal is different from the crude ore. Every lover of Switzerland and its mountains knows them, and has had cause to thank Mr. Whymper for the interest and assistance they have afforded him. Both editions have now been revised and brought up to date. We do not know if any further illustrations have been added, but at any rate those given 'surprise,' as Count Smalltork would say, by their variety and number.

From the Office, 18 Charing Cross Road, W.C. The Pall Mall Magazine. In the July number of this magazine perhaps the most important paper, among an important number of contents, is Commander Cagni's account of the expedition which carried him 'nearest the Pole.' There are many other interesting articles, however. 'Opera in Germany and England,' by Kathleen Schlesinger, revives a frequent subject of dispute, while many will turn with pleasurable anticipations to the 'Real Conversation' between Mr. George Moore and Mr. William Archer. These conversations are actually a little too 'real,' in that they sometimes descend to the consideration of trivialities. The remainder of the number may be dismissed with a reference to Professor Geikie's contribution on our coal supply, and an interesting article on 'James Stephens, the Fenian Head Centre,' by 'One Who Knew Him.' The illustrations are numerous as usual, if scarcely so good as in some previous numbers.

From Puttkammer & Mühlbrecht, Berlin.—'Wegweiser durch die neuere Litteratur der Rechts- und Staatswissenschaften,' für die Praxis bearbeitet von Otto Mühlbrecht. Band II. enthaltend die Litteratur der Jahre 1893-1900. It would be difficult to find anywhere a bookseller so well qualified as is Herr Otto Mühlbrecht for the task of compiling such a work as that of which the second volume lies before us. In his preface to this volume the compiler says that this bibliography is the harvest of long years of fruitful practice in that special department of the trade, the literature of law and politics, combined with the study of all bibliographical works and periodicals relating thereto. The 'Wegweiser' (Guide) does not claim to be complete, neither should we think completeness desirable, even if possible, but Herr Mühlbrecht tells us that it contains a selection of the better publications from his 'Allgemeine Bibliographie der Staats- und Rechtswissenschaften,' edited by him from its beginning in 1868 and in whose thirty-three published volumes more than 120,000 titles have been accurately and bibliographically recorded. All that is noteworthy in legal and political literature published prior to 1868 is also found in the 'Wegweiser.' As this guide not only includes the publications of Germany and Austria-Hungary but also those of Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, North America, Spain, Sweden, and Norway and Switzerland, Herr Mühlbrecht is justified in saying that no such treasury of information on the subjects of which it treats, of such international extent, brought up to the end of the nineteenth century, and so systematically classified, can elsewhere be found. An excellent index filling 123 three-column pages materially enhances the value of this monumental work which every law bookseller and member of the legal profession ought to possess.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The Fall of the Curtain,' by Harold Begbie. From a popular point of view, interest in Mr. Begbie's novel is considerably discounted by a want of honour in the chief characters. There is scarcely an actor in the story with whom the reader can conscientiously sympathise, and it indeed says much for Mr. Begbie's skill that, with such a set of unscrupulous rogues and schemers, he should have been able to construct so highly absorbing and powerful a work. The heroine, Hannah Mersey, in particular, alienates sympathy from herself by her designing nature. After a fashion she is a species of Becky Sharp, and exhibits a similar combination of cleverness and good looks with hypocrisy and worldly ambition. She accepts the position of governess and companion in the family of an eccentric nobleman in the country, whose mind is taken up with the cares of farming stock rather than the 'smart' society set surrounding his beautiful but unprincipled wife; and very soon, although she has in the meantime met a baronet whom she very much admires, she conspires to promote a divorce between the Earl and his wife and to step into the shoes of the deposed woman. In this she succeeds, but she makes for herself vindictive enemies in the persons of the Earl's former mistress, now his housekeeper, and her son, a man of a depraved sensual type who preys upon the fashionable world as an 'advanced' poet. The details of the story throughout are extremely sordid, and leave an unpleasant flavour in the mouth, despite the author's frequent expressions of repugnance at the actions he describes. There are few readers, however, who, once embarked on the experiences of Hannah Mersey, but will follow them with interest to the close, and it is therefore the more to be regretted, considering the remarkable intensity of the author's style, that he has not seen the advisability of imparting a greater degree of vanity to the characterisation of his story.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Lena Laird,' by William J. Laidlay. The author of this novel will be remembered as the writer of a previous work on 'The Royal Academy: its Uses and Abuses,' which attracted considerable attention at the time of publication on account of its attack on the self-interested methods obtaining at Burlington House. In his present book he has returned to the charge, though in a less direct form. The story is largely made up of artists and the discussion of art matters. The heroine is a sweet Scotch girl who goes over to Paris to study music, and is beloved by a young painter named Trevor, who with several companions from this country is a pupil in the art school of the famous Monsieur Chevalet. Among these is an objectionable character called Sam Slyme, who is never weary of denouncing the injustice and exclusiveness of the Royal Academy, but at the same time by every grovelling, underhanded action he is capable of seeks to obtain admission within the charmed circle. Ultimately he is elected an Associate, and is on the point of marrying the daughter of a wealthy art patron when discovery of his actual baseness overtakes him. Not only has he made dishonourable proposals to Lena, but has slandered her and her husband, Trevor, by spreading a report that they are not really married; while, to make matters even worse, he has encompassed the death of a brother artist. Slyme is used by Mr. Laidlay as a means of enforcing the argument that the man who has private influence and the backing up of the Royal Academy clique gets on, while the unassisted and really more talented artist (i.e. Trevor) is left to starve. The desire of the author to spread his own particular views militates against the success of his work as a novel, and the constant introduction of the Burlington House grievance becomes a little wearisome and irritating. This is a pity, because in many respects the work shows signs of distinct merit.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Catherine of Calais,' by Mrs. Henry de la Pasture. A very charming picture of a simple-minded romantic girl is given in this novel, and artistic contrast is afforded by the presence of several personages of a more worldly character. When we first meet Catherine of Calais she is a sweet maiden of sixteen, living with an eccentric old aunt at the town named. With her worthy good-natured bonne, she goes one day on the pier to watch the arrival of the steamer from England. Among the passengers is a tall, handsome, elderly man, who at once inspires her with a deep passion. Though she has never even spoken to him, he becomes the object of her constant thought, her hero and the personification of everything noble and lofty minded. Of course it could hardly be expected that in the pages of fiction happy chance should fail to come to the rescue of this forlorn damsel. While mingled with the crowd at a fire she makes the acquaintance of her aristocratic innamorato, and further events disclose the coincidence that he is the son of a man who at one time was engaged to her aunt. This fact, however, in one way is anything but to the advantage of the lovesick heroine, seeing that that lady on dying leaves him all her money and nothing to her niece, who by this time has been consigned as a poor dependant to the care of uncongenial relatives in England. It would be unfair to state what results from this circumstance. Enough that the story of Catherine's attachment is exceedingly well told, interesting, and moving. The book might appropriately be called the romance of a young, unsophisticated girl. It will probably be surmised that the object of her adoration never shows himself worthy of the infatuation. Lady Sarah Adelstane, his amusing mother, when speaking of her late husband and how she was disillusioned after marriage, frankly remarks that he had 'the face of a troubadour and the soul of a cook,' and in the sense that he is exceedingly cold and unresponsive the son takes after his father. At any rate, he fails to rise to a due appreciation of poor Catherine's whole-hearted, unselfish affection. Refined timidity and worldly arrogance are in more instances than one contrasted in this story, and the reader in his pursuit of the heroine's affecting experiences will run across many interesting specimens of both phases of character.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co. (Bristol).— 'Sidmouth as a Health Resort and Place of Residence,' by A. Macindoe, M.D., D.P.H. While not claiming for this handy and useful guide that it is more than a compilation, and warning his readers against concluding that the Vale of the Sid is a veritable Elysium or Garden of the Blest, Dr. Macindoe gives us withal so attractive a description of Sidmouth's situation, physical character, climate, water supply and drainage (which last two items are most important considerations in the choice of a health resort), that, for our own part, we should be only too pleased to verify all his dicta on the spot at the earliest possible date. There is a valuable chapter on the meteorology of the locality, and the author gives a list of plants to be found in the neighbourhood. The book is accompanied by a section of the coast showing the geological formation.

NEW EDITIONS.—Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith has published an eighth edition of the late Mr. J. F. Nicholl's admirable work 'How to See Bristol.' As a guide for the excursionist, the naturalist, and the archaeologist no more suitable work could be wished for. There are no less than seventy-six illustrations. 'Out of the Jaws of Death,' a very characteristic example of Mr. Frank Barrett's excellent powers as a novelist, comes to us in a well-printed sixpenny edition from Messrs. Cassell & Company.—Those who find pleasure in hearing of the oddities of the juvenile generation will heartily welcome the new edition of Mr. David Macrae's 'Quaint Sayings of Children' which Messrs. Morison & Co. have now added to their 'Sixpenny Series.'—A new edition at sixpence has been published by Mr. Grant Richards of Mr. E. W. Hornung's absorbing story, 'The Amateur Cracksman.'

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA

ON THE

Instalment Plan

A NEW OFFER

THE Daily Express has much pleasure in informing the Trade that arrangements have now been concluded with Messrs. W. & R. CHAMBERS, Ltd., whereby it is enabled again to offer the 20TH CENTURY CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA on the instalment plan. The success attending the previous offer has induced the Publishers to grant an extension for a limited time only.

The terms of the New Offer will be as follows:

On the Instalment Plan.

CLOTH SETS, 4/- with order, and CASH.
8 further payments of 9/6 or £3 : 15 : 0

HALF-MOROCCO SETS, 4/- with order, and
10 further payments of 11/9 or £5 : 12 : 6

THREE-QUARTER MOROCCO, 4/- with order, and
14 further payments of 11/9 or £7 : 15 : 0

FULL MOROCCO, 4/- with order, and
20 further payments of 11/9 or £11 : 0 : 0

NOTE.—Under the Daily Express terms the Bookseller takes no risk and accepts no responsibility. He has not to stock the books or even to handle them; nor has he to collect further instalments, all this work being undertaken by the Publishers. As soon as he obtains the order he has earned his commission.

In thanking the Trade for the past assistance they have afforded the Daily Express in connection with this offer, the Express takes the opportunity of pointing out that this new offer will afford Newsagents and Booksellers an excellent chance of earning handsome commissions. The new offer will be extensively advertised in the columns of the many leading papers, and every advertisement will impress strongly on Subscribers that they MUST ORDER THROUGH A BOOKSELLER OR NEWSAGENT. Former newspaper book offers have ignored the Trade. It is the wish of the Publishers and of the Daily Express that the Trade should participate to the full in the present offer of the 20TH CENTURY CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA. In order, however, that full benefits should accrue to them, it need hardly be pointed out that Newsagents and Booksellers should follow up the newspaper advertisements with personal canvass wherever possible, and help to make the offer more widely known by displaying the bills, posters, &c., that will be supplied by the Publishers.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

By E. MARSTON.

CHAPTER

- I. Jacob Tonson—1656-1736. Portrait.
II. Thomas Guy—1644-1724. "
III. John Dunton—1659-1733. "
IV. Samuel Richardson—1689-1761. "

CHAPTER

- V. Thomas Gent—1691-1778. Portrait.
VI. Alice Guy (wife of Thomas Gent).
VII. William Hutton—1723-1815. Portrait.
VIII. James Lackington—1746-1815. "

The Illustrations include the above seven portraits and a picture of Samuel Richardson's House at Fulham.

THE GLOBE.

'He has laid all book-lovers under a heavy but agreeable obligation. . . . He writes in easy, genial style, and so puts his material together in appetising fashion. . . . One of the daintiest books ever turned out by his firm.'

THE ATHENÆUM.

'Mr. Marston's memoirs are not so picturesque written as those of Charles Knight, but his sketches have more vigour, and are consequently less idealistic. The careers of the seven booksellers—to say nothing of a bookseller's wife—are undeniably interesting, and the fact that they have frequently been noticed at greater length does not prevent one from enjoying Mr. Marston's kindly and pleasant gossip.'

The Athenæum kindly suggests that a volume of Mr. Marston's personal reminiscences of the literary men, as well as publishers and booksellers, with whom he came in contact would be acceptable.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

'Eight short readable sketches, seven of them on famous booksellers, and one suggested by a bookseller's wife.'

THE MORNING LEADER.

'Mr. Marston's "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days" is indeed most pleasant reading. It has a crisp primness of style and a gentle humour which are delightful in their way, and admirably adapted to their author's task.'

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

In a long and very kindly notice, says:—'Mr. Marston is an enthusiastic angler, and has written, as the recreation of a busy man, not a few charming little books on that delightful pastime and allied pursuits. . . . His latest volume, however, is not concerned with people and events of recent times, but with a few of the forerunners of the modern publishing trade. In other words, he takes us back to the days of Charles II. . . . A volume based on his own reminiscences of people he has met could scarcely fail to be, not merely a veritable human document, but a genuine contribution to the history—often diverting enough—of the making and selling of books.'

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

'A Publisher on Publishers.—A charmingly got-up little volume, containing short biographical sketches of seventeenth and eighteenth century booksellers. The book is very good reading.'

DAILY MAIL.

'Mr. E. Marston writes this cheery little book about his predecessors.'

THE STANDARD.

'We are inclined to regret that Mr. Marston has not drawn from his own reminiscences of Paternoster Row, and what it represented in the mid-Victorian era.'

THE ACADEMY.

'We thank him for a pleasant little book.'

THE SCOTSMAN.

'It is made up of eight pleasant, often humorously-written, sketches of the lives of historic bibliopoles. . . . The work will interest anyone who reads it, and cast a peculiar spell over the many book-lovers whom the eighteenth century firmly bewitches.'

THE FIELD.

'It is saying very much indeed to recommend, as we heartily do, these sketches as quite worthy of the subject and the author.'

THE SPHERE.

'How excellent I, at least, have found these "Sketches of Booksellers" may be judged from the fact that I cut out the articles as they appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, intending to preserve them. They are far better preserved for me in the dainty book just issued.'

MORNING POST.

'Mr. Marston's very pleasing and readable little book, which is as prettily bound and nicely illustrated as it is agreeably conceived and written.'

THE GLASGOW HERALD.

'It is pleasantly written, and contains much out-of-the-way information. Its attractiveness is enhanced by a series of portraits and a dainty binding.'

THE SPECTATOR.

'Mr. Marston has done all that was possible for his subject, but that has sometimes been but little. The two conspicuously best of these eight papers are those dealing with William Hutton and Thomas Lackington.'

BOOKSELLER.

'Within these pages Mr. Marston has gathered together a very large amount of exceedingly interesting matter arranged in a chatty and readable form.'

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

'There is a good deal of interest to the general reader in the pleasantly-discursive little "Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days," which have been written by Mr. E. Marston.'

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

'There is no lack of interest, even of romance, in these pleasant sketches, which, nevertheless, are as instructive as interesting.'
